Foreword

A foreword is an introduction, an introduction is a presentation. Allow me to present Miss Mary Kirtley Lamberton, the publisher and inspiration of this volume, a representative of an old Carlisle family that from the earliest day of the town and county has taken an active part not only in local but in national history; Miss Carrie E. Dinkle, my secretary, who so patiently took my dictation; Mrs. George Ritchey, who prepared the final manuscript; Miss Ruth Hemminger and Mrs. Christian Humer, who read the proof; Miss Esther Irvine Stiles, who has lettered the Quotation of the Frontispiece. Miss Stiles is a descendent of Robert Callender, Esquire, General William Irvine, Supreme Judge Thomas Duncan and Edward Stiles, Esquire. (Robert Callender and Judge Duncan have stones in the Old Graveyard). Also the members of my family who for years have assisted in my research. Any one who enjoys this book should have a feeling of gratitude to these, my assistants. It is a garland of laurel and immortelles with nothing mine but the ribbon which binds them together.

Tribute to Mr. A. Allen Line

In October 1928 when the publication of this book was decided upon, several groups of pictures of tombstones were planned with the late Mr. A. Allen Line. These were to include stones of one of the Chief Justices, one of other Judges, Presidents of Dickinson College, early teachers and Revolutionary soldiers. The last week of Mr. Line's life, in fact on Wednesday of that week, he had begun the work. The group of stones was his last work, developed and placed on the drying frame on Friday afternoon of which evening "God's Finger touched him and he lightly slept." Those who knew Mr. Line intimately, respected and loved him. Generous in thought as well as in action his life told its own story.

The opinion in which the town held him was shown in the outpouring for his memorial. And what a typical memorial! For fifty years he had been taking photographs, carefully preserving all his plates. Buildings entirely destroyed, changes of every kind are preserved through his faithful care. These plates will all be placed in a cabinet carefully filed and indexed where people can get them for use under the rules of the Hamilton Library. A tablet to the memory of Mr. Line is to be placed in the cabinet. Why is this typical? The town will get the benefit of Mr. Line's years of work from plates to which his name is attached. Carlisle has had many writers who in well-rounded sentences have given to the imagination the scenes of long ago; they are called local historians. But the late Mr. A. Allen Line visualizes to the eye the scenes, buildings, and people of long ago. He is a pictorial historian. I always called him that and he would say, "No, I am just a photographer." To Mr. Line's friends his gentle passing in the home of the family where he had spent a great part of his adult life was but the fulfillment of his favorite poem, the poem which I heard him recite a few days before his death—
Crossing the Bar

Sunset and evening star,
And one clear call for me!
And may there be no moaning of the bar,
When I put out to sea,
But such a tide as moving seems asleep,
Too full for sound and foam,
When that which drew from out the boundless deep,
Turns again home.

Twilight and evening bell,
And after that the dark!
And may there be no sadness of farewell,
When I embark;
For, though from out our bourne of time and place
The flood may bear me far,
I hope to see my Pilot face to face
When I have crossed the bar.

—Tennyson.

The Old Graveyard

There are seven proprietary towns in Pennsylvania. They are given as Philadelphia, 1682; Easton, 1738; York, 1741; Reading, 1748; Carlisle, 1751; Bedford, 1766; and Sunbury, 1772. A recent letter to the secretary of the historical societies in five of these places, asking if the proprietors had given a public burying ground as had been done in Carlisle, drew most courteous responses. It is interesting to note that "at the southern end of the town (Sunbury) is the Sunbury, or Penn cemetery, which was laid out in 1772, at the same time with the town, for the use of the citizens as a public burial ground." In Reading we are told that in 1840, "the first large cemetery, the present Charles Evans Cemetery, was formed from a large plot of ground given to the city by Charles Evans." In 1751 the site for the county seat of Cumberland County was selected and directions for its plans were given by the proprietors. In 1767 the following patent was given:

"In pursuance of the Honorable the proprietary's warrant bearing date the 6th day of Feby, 1767, there was surveyed for John Montgomery, Robert Miller, William Lyon, John McKnight, Thomas Donnelan, and William Miller in Trust for the Inhabitants in & about the town of Carlisle a lot of ground for a Graveyard or Burying place situate on the South side of the Sd. town beginning at a marked post sixty feet distant from the South End of Bedford Street opposite to the East side thereof, thence extending on the same direction as Sd. Street S 10 degrees W 25 Ps. to a Post Thence N 80 degrees W. 25 Ps. to a Post, thence N 10 degrees 25 Ps to a Post, thence by the South Street of the said town of Carlisle S. 80 degrees E. 25 Ps. to the Place of Beginning containing three acres, three rods, Twenty-five perches as appears by the above Draught.

John Armstrong

To John Lukens, Esq.

D. S.

Surveyor General."

Of the names on this patent, John Armstrong and William Lyon have stones in this graveyard. Undoubtedly the others were buried here, but their stones like many others have long since disappeared. On the First Church patent we will find some of these same names. If the patents of the Episcopal Church, Market House and Court House could be examined some of the same names would doubtless appear in their lists.

List of Tombstones

The following list of tombstones in the Old Graveyard was made in 1898. In the copying from these tombstones, with but a few exceptions, the entire epitaph was taken. These few were left to be secured by rubbings, and for some reasons or another the work was not done. This is unfortunate as they were very interesting. The copy was corrected and, save for the few typographical errors which with the most careful transposing will occur, is correct. Some of the stones mentioned in this list have entirely disappeared. Some have been removed to the new part of the Old Graveyard or to other cemeteries. Some whose dates would suggest that they belong in the list have only recently been brought to the Old Graveyard from other cemeteries, or have been re-erected. And many, many new stones have since been added. To provide for such new names blank pages have been placed at the end of the book. The cut of the patent was made from a photostat of the original patent. The signatures are on the back and are given in the printed copy of the patent.

 Reader, behold & drop a tear.
 Beauty's remains lie buried here;
 But heaven, which lent the transient boon
 Hath bid her Sun go down at noon.
 Ye fair, since hers may be your case,
 Forget the beauties of the face;
 Go first in virtues path and tread,
 Then safely mingle with the dead;
 And you'll with sister seraphs join
 Where heavens refulgent glories shine.

Johnstone The Congregation of the Presbyterian Church
1854 in Carlisle have erected this memorial grave of Rev. Mervin E. Johnstone, their pastor who died July 31 A. D. 1854 — 31 years. He was gifted & eloquent preeminently benign and courteous in his manners. All who love his Master loved and lamented him, but the sorrow which bewailed his early decease was comforted with the brightness and beauty of the Christian hope that triumphed in his death and calls for a trophy on his tomb.

In memory of Miss Margaret Stuart who departed this life on the 23rd of July, 1833. Aged 42 years. Blessed are the dead, yea, saith the word, that die in Christ, the Living Lord.	Stuart 1833
Ann Stuart, June 17-1789 — Aug. 10-1865.	1865
Died at his late residence in Dickinson Township on the evening of Friday the 8th of October 1830, James Stuart, in 53rd year of his age. It may with truth be said of the deceased that he was a dutiful son and a kind brother, a just and impartial magistrate and an honest man, he was a professor of Religion and during his last illness and at his death, he experienced the consolation of his religion by expressing his firm hope and confidence in a glorious resurrection through the merits and meditation of his Redeemer.	1830
“Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord” Died on the morning of the 11th of September 1828 at his late residence, Dickinson Township, Samuel Stuart in his 88th year of his age. It is a great consolation to his family	1828 and others that in his illness his mind appeared collected and he spoke frequently of being resigned to die and placing all his hopes and confidence in obtaining the victory alone through Christ his Redeemer.

- 1844 In memory of Margaret, wife of Samuel Stuart, who departed this life February 20th, 1844 in the 92nd year of her age.

Near this spot is deposited all that was mortal of Thomas Duncan, Esq., L. L. D. Born at Carlisle 20 Nov. 1760. D. 16 Nov. 1827. Called to the bar at an early age, he was rapidly borne by Genius, Perseverance, & In- tegrity to the Pinnacle of his Profession; and in the fulness of his Fame, was elevated to the Bench of the Supreme Court of his Native State, for which a sound judgment, bound- less stores of Legal Science & a profound Reverance of the Common Law had particu- larly fitted him. Of his Judicial Labours the reported cases of the period are the best Eulogy. As a husband, indulgent. As a father, kind, as a friend sincere. As a Magis- trate, incorruptible & as a citizen, inestim- able. He was honored by the wise and good, and wept by a wide circle of Relatives and friends. Honestam Quam splendida.	Duncan 1827

South Street Gate of the "Old Graveyard"

L'ENVOI

When earth's last picture is painted, and the tubes are twisted and dried,
When the oldest colors have faded, and the youngest critic has died,
We shall rest, and, faith, we shall need it—lie down for an æon or two,
Till the Master of All Good Workmen shall set us to work anew!

And those that were good will be happy: they shall sit in a golden chair;
They shall splash at a ten-league canvas with brushes of comets' hair;
They shall find real saints to draw from—Magdalene,
Peter, and Paul;
They shall work for an age at a sitting and never be tired at all!

And only the Master shall praise us, and only the Master shall blame;
And no one shall work for money, and no one shall work for fame;
But each for the joy of the working, and each, in his separate star,
Shall draw the Thing as he sees It for the God of Things as They Are!

—Rudyard Kipling.

An Hour in the Old Graveyard.

Let us take a walk in the Old Carlisle Graveyard. We shall enter from South Street. Soon we come to a wall of stones of all sizes and kinds. About thirty years ago a man, then over sixty years of age, told me that when he was a boy the residents of Carlisle undertook to build the wall. Boylike he came with his father on their load. A stone falling on his foot bruised it badly, and he was taken to the spring at the end of the street to bathe the hurt in running water. A kind hearted old man, to entertain him, told him of Jacques Le Tort for whom the spring was named, told him of the wife of Jacques, Ann, who with her broom could put to flight the fiercest Indian. "Such an impression," continues the narrator, "did he make that I have remained a bachelor for fear of marrying an ANN who in lieu of a missing 'Injun' would exercise her broom and muscle on me."

Legend says that this graveyard was once an Indian cemetery but in 1767 it was given by William Penn's sons, the then proprietors of Pennsylvania, for a burial ground.

Before swinging back the gate which is controlled by a ball and chain, think of these words by Bennett Bellman, who himself sleeps within. "With the living we have naught to do. A man's biography is written properly only after he is dead—when he is no longer called upon to pass upon the stage, to wear robes or tatters, to laugh or cry, be hooted or applauded—for then the play is over, the curtain fallen, the audience gone, and he is equally indifferent to their praise or blame."

Open the gate and enter. Three paths are before you, one turning west, one south, and one east. Just to the right of the entrance is the stone of Miss Rebecca Wightman (died Nov. 23, 1871). She started so many Carlisle feet on the scholastic path that it is but fitting she should be the A, B, C, of this small book of memory. One of the objects of interest shown to visitors at Harvard College is a stone opposite the entrance, dated 1707; it reads:

This good school dame
No longer school may keep,
Which gives us cause
For children's sake to weep.

This inscription should be transcribed from "Dame" Murry's stone to that of Miss Wightman.

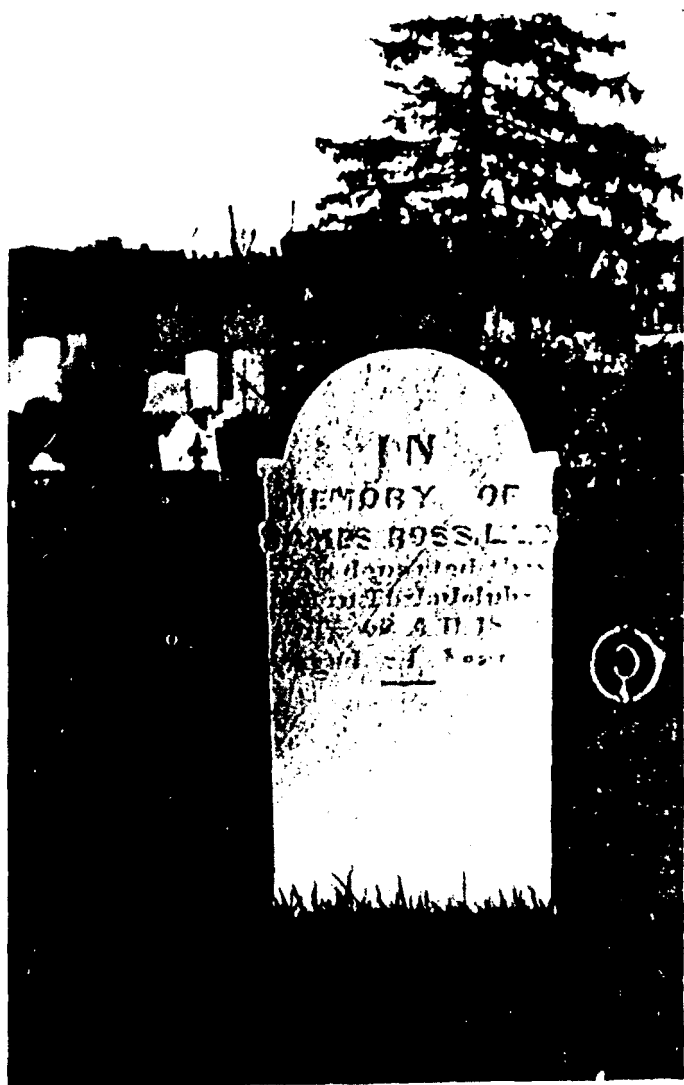

Rebecca Wightman

Directly in the rear of Miss Wightman's stone a little to the right, is a stone reading, "Mrs. Margaret Pringle, wife of Rev. P. Francis Pringle, pastor of the Associate Church of Carlisle, died Feb. 15, 1826; aged 71 years." The Rev. Mr. Talbot Chambers said in an address delivered at Carlisle, "In my boyhood I remember there was a little stone church of which Mr. Francis Pringle, a gentleman universally respected, was pastor." The deed to the plot on which this square stone church stood is in the court house. It is from Richard Penn to William Blair, John Smith, John McCoy, et al., and the consideration, six pounds sterling.

From this grave, step to the iron fence of the Irving lot. The Lancaster Historical Society tells us that James Ross was born in Oxford (now Upper Oxford) township, Chester county, May 18, 1744. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. His grandfather, James Ross, lived at Carrickfergus, near Belfast, in Ireland. His three sons emigrated to America. The son, William, first settled in York county; but afterwards removed to Chester county, and took up and settled on a tract of land about a mile southeast of Russelville. He married Elizabeth Kidd, by whom he had eight children, among whom was James. James Ross graduated from Princeton College in 1766. In those days, it has been said, Princeton was all Latin, and though the course of instruction was comparatively narrow, it certainly produced classical scholars of the highest order. In such an environment Ross naturally became an accomplished Latinist, and as soon as he was graduated he was invited to take charge of a classical school in Philadelphia. At a later date he received the honorary title of Doctor of Laws.

Tradition represents Professor Ross as a pedagogue of a type which was familiar enough in early records, but which we have probably rarely seen. Personally, he was a handsome man, with light hair and a florid complexion—genial on the street, but terrible in the classroom. He carried a "cat-of-nine-tails" attached by a ring to his little finger, and was so absent minded that he sometimes forgot to remove the implements of torture when he took his dinner. In addressing his students he always spoke in Latin, and took no heed of their requests unless they addressed him in the same language. He was an enthusiastic patriot, and insisted on wearing domestic clothing, for the purpose of encouraging home industries, even when goods of English manufacture could be purchased at a much lower price. He sought to dignify important national events.

Over in the shadow of the Hamilton lot is the stone of Professor Ross' first wife, Rosanna nee Sharp, who died April 13, 1788, before James was a man of fame. Almost hidden by pine needles is the quaint inscription:

She was an amiable, pious woman
An affectionate wife,
A sincere friend.

From Dickinson College he went to Chambersburg. Here in 1794 he published a Latin grammar. Other works followed in rapid succession. Erasmus' "Colloquies" and the translations of "Aesop's Fables," "The Shorter Catechism," and the translation of a Greek grammar into Latin. He next lived in Lancaster where he taught in Franklin College for a time and then moved to Philadelphia where he died in 1827. One of his most noted works was the ode in memory of Dr. Charles Nisbet, president of Dickinson College, who died in 1804.

His second wife, Catherine Irving, survived him, dying in 1846, at an advanced age. James Ross left no descendants.

With this welcome from the early teacher, the clergy and writer of the higher branches, take a path to the west. At the turn see the name, Susanna Ritner, wife of Joseph Ritner, Jr., (died Dec. 30, 1862, aged 29 years). "What's in a name?" Does not this one call to mind Governor Ritner? Whittier makes every Pennsylvanian grateful for the lines that perpetuate it so sweetly—

"Thank God for the token; one life still is free,
One spirit untrammelled, unbending one knee.

Thank God, that one arm from the shackle has broken,
Thank God, that one man as a free man has spoken.

And O, will the land where the free soul of Penn
Still lingers and breathes o'er mountain and glen,

Will that land of the free and the brave wear a chain?
Will the call to the rescue of Freedom be vain?

No, Ritner, her friends at thy warning shall stand, Erect for the truth, like their ancestral land."

The state has marked the grave of Joseph Ritner, Senior, but it is a pleasure to have even this shadow of his name in our old graveyard.

On the left side of the path once stood a stone that now has disappeared. This stone was most graceful in design, the top being cut in three scallops with over the center a wreath of ivy and roses. It read, "Eliza Holmes, wife of Jonathan Holmes and daughter of Commodore O'Brian, U. S. N. Born in Algiers, March 22, 1780; died Jan. 3, 1870." Look further along the row and read from the monument of the son of Eliza Holmes. This stone marks the honored "Patriot's Grave" of William E. Holmes, First Sergeant Co. A, 7th Regiment, P. U. R. C., son of Jonathan and E. M. Holmes, born March 27, 1836; died Jan. 3, 1865, on his return from Andersonville prison. "Man's inhumanity to man makes countless thousands mourn."

Captain Erkuries Beatty was the first wounded man to return to Carlisle for recuperation. The Captain Beatty Post is named in his honor. As soon as Captain Beatty recovered some strength he had a recruiting office in his house where the Orpheum Theatre now stands. The first man to enlist in his recruiting station was this same William Holmes.

For the grave of the original Jonathan Holmes there has been long and anxious search. Can it be that his dust lies under these paths just as his brain work lies under the plans of the town he helped to lay out? In another part of the graveyard is a Holmes lot fenced in and protected where stately epitaphs set forth the virtues and good deeds of this branch, but what did Mary (who died July 9, 1816, at the age of 39) do, that by herself she lies near them—heavily walled in? Can no one tell?

Near the Holmes graves, on the path, is a stone that must have been a sampler of the marble cutter's art, "Hannah Young"—the letters are of different kinds. Surely Hannah's family had ornate taste and liked variety. Follow the path to the other gate. In the corner of a lot near it stands a beautifully cut monument. The design is a pillar supporting an urn from which the flames are bursting. It is time worn but its beauty is as pure as the life it marks. "Mary, wife of John R. Knox, died March 18, 1837; aged 23." Her maiden name must have been Douglass for the oldest stone in the lot is, "In memory of John Douglass, formerly of the city of Dublin." He emigrated to America in the year 1795 and died in the borough of Carlisle, April 30, 1865. In the opposite corner is a large monument; on the side towards the stone is the inscription, "John Knox, M. D. Born 1802—died 1889." Could it be that of her husband?

Take a few paces to the south and find the stone of Robert Cameron which bears the inscription, "This stone is a tribute from the inhabitants of Carlisle through the School Directors to the Memory of a Scholar and a man of worth, Robert Cameron, son of James and Margaret Cameron, who rose by merit from an humble but honest parentage to the honorable rank of Master of the High School at this place and died on 27 January, 1843, 43 yrs., 5 mo., 13 da. Universally respected for his learning and beloved for his virtues." Stones to Andrew Blair, president, James Hamilton, secretary, and Lewis Harlan, member of the school board of Carlisle may be found in another part of the graveyard.

Retrace your steps, and directly behind the Knox lot you will find that of the Watts family. This plot is of great interest, for side by side lie Revolutionary, ecclesiastical, and legal graves. Here repose General Henry Miller and his wife, Sara Ursula. General Henry Miller was born Feb. 13, 1751 in Manor township, Lancaster County. His father, John Miller, purchased a tract of land within the limits of the Manor of Conestoga, on part of which he laid out a town plot and called it Millersburg (now Millersville.) The ancestral home is still standing, a fair specimen of the era of colonial building. After going to school in Lancaster he took up the study of law. He married on June 26, 1770, Sara Ursula, one of the three daughters of Joseph Rose who had come from Ireland and who was a graduate of Dublin University. Ursula's grace and beauty are preserved in a portrait painted by Benjamin West. Henry Miller left his practice of law to become senior lieutenant in the company which was part of Colonel William Thompson's battalion. Because of the condition of domestic affairs he resigned his commission of lieutenant colonel on Dec. 18, 1778. General Washington and Lieutenant Colonel Miller had become close friends and General Washington regretfully accepted the resignation. Having passed through every phase of legal experience from attorney to judge, Colonel Miller again took up his sword at the time of the Whiskey Insurrection. He was one of the original members of the Cincinnati. He moved from York to Baltimore in 1801. In the second war with Great Britain, he again accepted a commission, this time as brigadier-general of the militia, and was charged with the defense of Fort M'Henry and its dependencies. He moved to Carlisle from his farm, which was at the confluence of the Susquehanna and Juniata Rivers, where he died April 15, 1824 and was buried with military honors. Rev. John Campbell, D. D. (died 1819), for over thirty years pastor of the St. John's Episcopal church, lies here also.

In the same lot may be found the graves of Frederick Watts and his first and second wives. The epitaph of the latter wife could be a beautiful definition of the word "Lady." "Always ready not only to do a graceful and kindly act, but doing it so gracefully and kindly that the grace and kindness were doubled." Judge Watts had such force of character and power of concentration that he was able to conduct a large practice, fill the office of President of the Cumberland Valley Railroad, and be co-reporter on the State reports (three volumes in connection with C. B. Penrose; ten volumes alone; and nine volumes with H. G. Sergeant.) As a judge and agricultural commissioner he alike honored and was honored. At State College one of the recent additions is called the Frederick Watts Building.

The railroad he so successfully managed placed on its tracks the first sleeping car ever used. Concerning this the story goes thus: In 1837 two weary travellers left the stage at Chambersburg, then the western terminus of the road. It was one at night and they were tired. Richard Gerlin, the road superintendent heard them grumble, "Why couldn't someone make a car in which one could sleep." The superintendent was on his way to Philadelphia to buy two cars of Dash and Imbry. To them he gave an idea from which they all together made a plan of a sleeping car. In the spring of 1838, "The Chambersburg" started its daily trip. The car was shaped like an old fashioned stage coach, concave at the bottom, thirty-six feet long, with seats along the side and two at each end; below each seat hung a wide board that at night was raised and fastened to the permanent partitions which were six feet, four inches apart; the back of the seat lifted up and formed a second tier of berths; a third hung near the roof. This car accommodated fifty passengers, could only be used by through passengers, and asked no extra fare. A second car named "The Carlisle," was made from a day coach. The necessity for this second car shows the power of a conductor. "Major" McCartney of Carlisle, one of the conductors, was fastidious, abhorred tobacco and would not allow it to be used on the car. The other conductor, Simon Alto, was just the opposite. Fond of the weed, both chewing and smoking, he allowed its use freely. Such diverse rules led to constant quarrels and to keep peace each was given his own castle. One of these cars has been bought by the Pullman Company and can be seen in its Chicago museum.

In August 13, 1849, Judge Watts welcomed to Carlisle, President Taylor. Unknown to many people is the fact that Frederick Watts was the secretary of the Board of Trustees of Dickinson College in 1824. His name appeared on the proposal from the Board for a connection between the Seminary of the German Reformed Church and Dickinson College, which it was supposed would be highly advantageous to both institutions. "The Board of Trustees promised the Seminary the use of a lecture room in the college edifice, the rent of a house for a professor, a lot of ground on the college ground a hundred feet square for the erection of suitable buildings, and free access to the college library and the lectures of the college professors for the theological students. The Professor of Theology, on the other hand, was to serve in the college as Professor of History and of the German language. Many other things were doubtless implied, all looking to a permanent union of the two institutions, and involving mutual co-operation and support." Although the union was not permanent, it did endure and prosper for a time.

The Alexander lot contains the graves of General Alexander and his family. General Samuel Alexander was one day in court defending a client, a man who had beaten his wife. He read to the jury a page from Blackstone to the effect that by the common law a man was allowed to chastise his wife moderately. "Blackstone," said Alexander, "is the great repository of the common law; the common law was made for the common people and God knows, gentlemen of the jury, where you can find anyone who is more common than my client." Amusing stories are often told of this man as leader of the early "musical band." Mrs. Ann Alexander founded the Benevolent Society and every good work in the town was assisted by her. Her daughter, Mrs. Jane Henderson, walked in her mother's footsteps.

Several years ago coming out of the Cumberland County courthouse where I had been hunting data concerning John Byres, lieutenant of Cumberland County at the beginning of the Revolution, I met the late Mr. William Henderson. I was telling him of some of the things I had found and he said, "Come over to the house and I'll show you his portrait." There it hung over the mantle in the Alexander house. Its eyes seemed to look directly into mine. The Continental uniform showed that he had risen to a colonel. Mr. Henderson said, "My mother bore the name of this man's wife, Jane Byres." We went up to the third floor where Mr. Henderson allowed me to examine some papers in a box. I was amazed at what I found. On the old handmade paper, with ink that did not fade, written by the quill pen as staunch and true as the hands that held it, were records new and interesting from men who played prominent parts in our country's struggle. From them I found that it was the brains and money of this man so little spoken of that had enabled Cumberland County to play the part it did in Pennsylvania's history. Mr. Henderson told me I could have the portrait photographed and copy some of the papers. But procrastination is the thief of many other things beside time, for Mr. Henderson became ill before I had used his permission and afterwards I never liked to bother him. Invaluable history was lost forever.

Turn now to the stone of John Hall Mason. It is in two pieces and unless protected will soon be gone, but, it can yet be read, "John Hall Mason, exemplary son of John Mason, for some time a teacher of the grammar school of Carlisle, who yielded up his soul into the hands of the Gracious Creator and Redeemer, through the instrumentality of typhoid fever, Nov. 6th, 1823, aged 30 years." Dr. Mason was opposed to funeral sermons, calling them "fulsome flattery." Therefore a short funeral service had been given and his son's associates raised the coffin to bear it away. His father arose and said, "Young men, step lightly, ye bear a temple of the Holy Ghost." Then overcome by grief he turned and putting his head on the shoulder of Dr. McCarter, said, "Dear Mac, say something that may be a blessing to his young companions." This appeal inspired Dr. McCarter to give at the grave such a discourse that a revival followed that is still spoken of with wonder. Twenty prominent ministers of different denominations claim to have been converted at this time.

The Chambers stones are often unnoticed being as unostentatious as the family they represent; the firmness with which they have withstood the passage of years is also typical. One of the most interesting accounts of Bunker Hill is given in a letter James Chambers wrote August 26, 1775, to his wife at Carlisle. It is quoted in many histories.

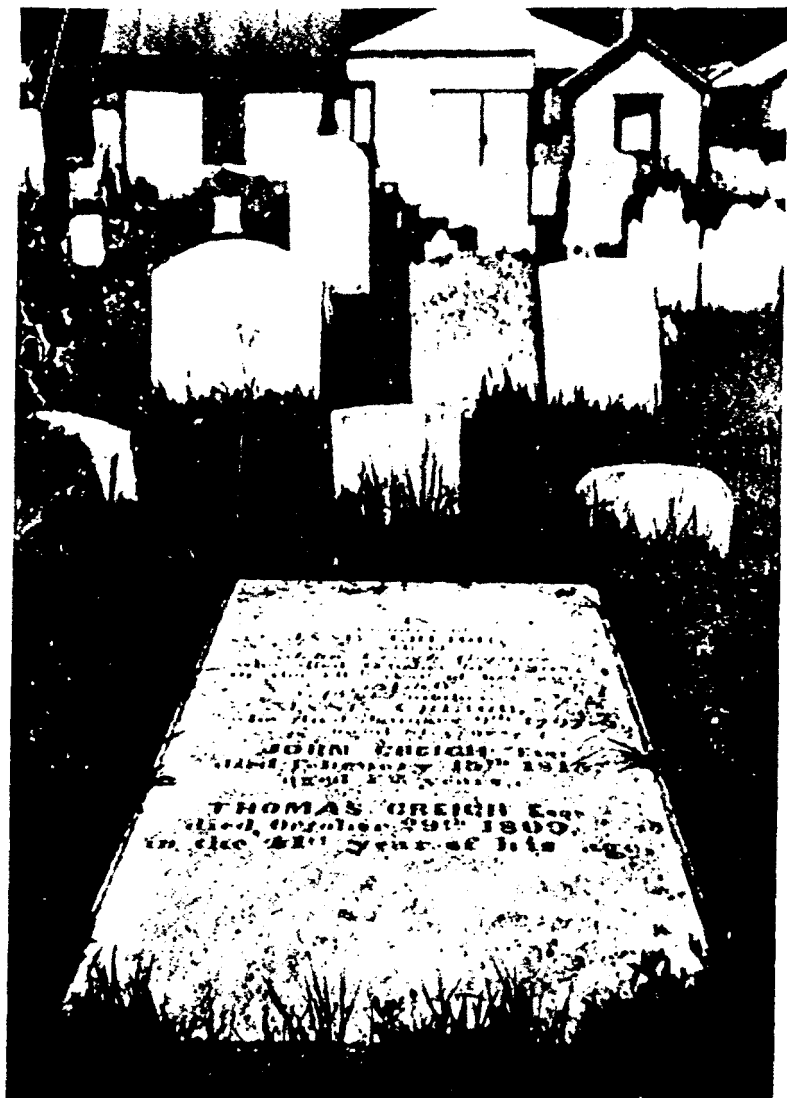

Near here lies Thomas Duncan, LL. D., whose beautiful inscription was penned by Judge Gibson. A critic thus sums his characteristics: "His habits of investigation, patient and systematic; his powers of discrimination cultivated by study and by intercourse with the acutest minds of the day; his style both of speaking and writing, easy, natural, graceful, and clear." It is said the altercations of Mr. Duncan and Mr. David Watts caused Judge Hamilton to have special laws passed for controlling evidence. They were equally brilliant although of different methods and lines of thought. One day in the heat of a dispute Mr. Watts who was large and well developed, said, "You, sir, I could put you in my pocket." Mr. Duncan, who was small and slight, replied, "If you did you would have more law in your pocket than you ever had in your head."

Mr. Watts lies some distance away but an anecdote of his courage suggests itself here. At the time of the Whiskey Insurrection, the insurgents had placed a pole outside the town and dared anyone to touch it. David Watts unarmed and unaccompanied rode in leisurely fashion to the spot, dismounted, cut down the pole and in the same leisurely manner rode home.

A white marble stone holds like a mosaic the re-erected stone of James Ramsey who died July 11, 1797. This stone was erected by Mrs. A. D. B. Smead with the assistance of Mr. Walter Stuart. Beside it stands the foundation of the stone of his wife. This is not the

Thomas Duncan, LL. D.

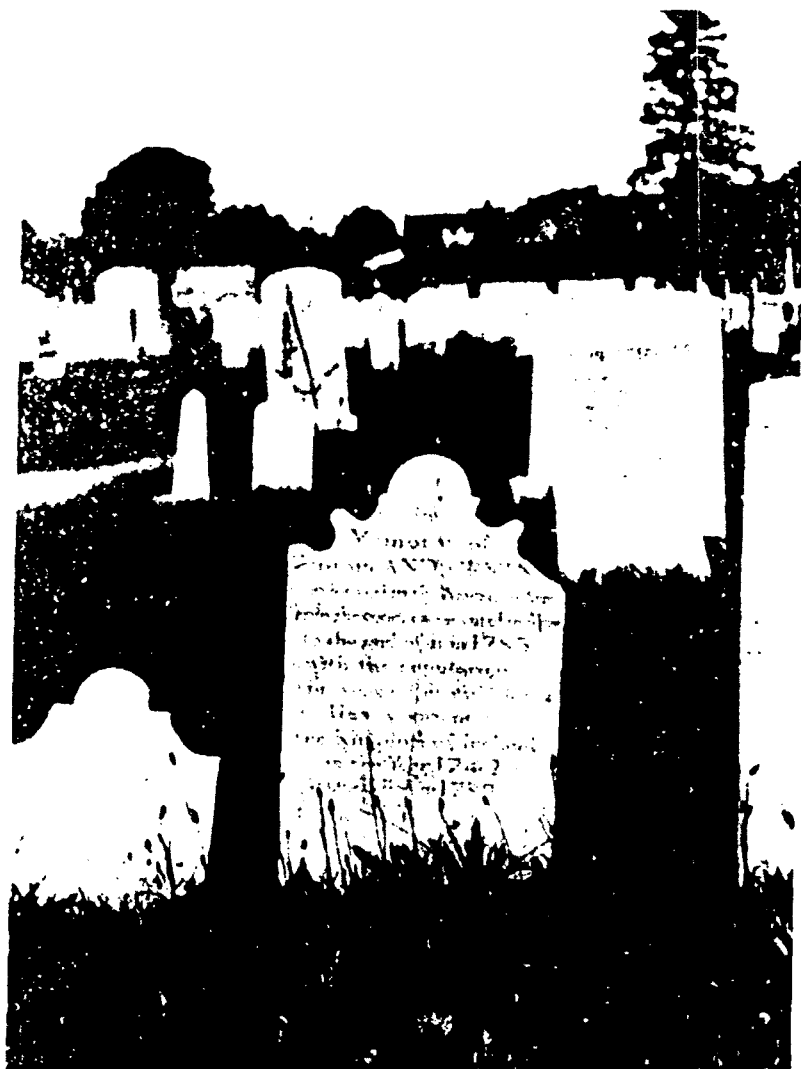

John Creigh, Esq.

Mrs. Ramsey who protected Andre and Despard, when they were prisoners in Carlisle. A man in Perry County had formed a company and marched to Carlisle to do vengeance to the prisoners. Unfortunately for the leader, but most fortunately for the prisoners, he had once been an apprentice of Mr. Ramsey and had a holy fear of Mrs. Ramsey. Mrs. Ramsey appeared with candle in hand and bade the captain "take his company and go home." Being afraid to disobey, the captain marched off only calling to the prisoners, "you can thank my old Missus for your lives." Afterwards, when they were leaving Norristown, the prisoners sent Mrs. Ramsey a box of spermaceti candles as a slight token of gratitude. The irate lady returned them, for she was too staunch a Whig to receive gratuity from a British officer.

We approach the grave of John Creigh. He came from Ireland and became a citizen of Carlisle in 1761. His almanacs can still be seen in some historical libraries. His wife was a Miss Duncan. He was one of the nine men, who, in the First Presbyterian Church, signed (July 12, 1774) the protest against the Colonies' wrongs.

Cross the path to the cannon and find Mollie Pitcher. The story of Mollie Pitcher — who can tell it? Mary Ludwig was born in either Monmouth or Mercer County, New Jersey. There were John L. Ludwig's, George L. Ludwig's, John George Ludwig's, George John Ludwig's in both counties in the early settlements. Historians say her mother was Irish and surely Mollie had the quick Irish tongue, the warm impulsive heart, and that close kinship of tears and laughter that comes from Irish blood. With it she had the strength of body and mind, the determination and never failing energy of the German. Mrs. Irvine, nee Callender, visiting in Trenton, employed the young girl for some domestic service. Finding her quick-witted and efficient she brought her back to Carlisle. The late Captain John Landis tells of her sweeping the steps of Dr. Irvine's home, and of her captivating at the same time with her blue eyes and shining hair the young barber, John Hays, who had his shop nearby. They were married, probably in Mrs. Irvine's home for the young couple took up their abode with her mistress.

When Paul Revere's voice roused the New England farmers, it re-echoed in the hills of Cumberland Valley and the loyal hearts responded as they always have to their country's call. John Hays went with Proctor's Artillery. Dr. Irvine laid down his surgeon's tools and locked his office door. Mrs. Irvine and Mollie had anxious hours during the days that followed. One day Mollie received a letter through a messenger. General Washington was gathering his forces in New Jersey to keep the British from New York. Her father and mother wanted her to come to Monmouth where her husband's company might arrive at any time. A day or two later Mrs. Irvine received word that General (formerly Dr.) Irvine, who had been taken prisoner at Quebec and was now on parole, was ill and sorely needed care. Mrs. Irvine knew by experience that Mollie was a good and tender nurse, and that Mollie's husband might be coming to Monmouth, and that Mollie had many friends and relatives there. She proposed that Mollie leave the children with her and go at once to General Irvine. Soon after Mollie reached the general, he regained his health, and Mollie went to Monmouth. She became an important adjunct to the army. She washed, she ironed, she cooked, she nursed, and above all, she kept up the morale of the men.

There are many stories told of her about this time. One day while busy at her washing she heard the kettle boiling. At the same time she heard a soldier's footsteps and called, "Quickly lift the kettle before the boys' supper be entirely spoiled." Her order was so quickly obeyed that she turned—to see the Commander-in-Chief! With deepest courtesies she apologized, but General Washington replied he was glad to do any service for one who did so much for his men.

A veteran newspaper man of Tioga County said his father told that, when he was a boy, his father had kept an old inn. A Revolutionary soldier spent much time at the tavern. One day the soldier told of how, wounded on the field of battle, he had been left for dead. An enemy going past thrust a bayonet through his leg fastening it to the ground. In the dusk of the night he saw a figure moving on the field. It was a woman. She found he was still alive although too weak to speak. Her deft fingers found the bayonet, withdrew it with "many an angry word for the coward who did it." Lifting him upon her broad back she carried him off the field, dressed his wounds, and nursed him with others over whom she had made a rude shelter. The men told him it was Mollie Pitcher, for that was now her name. Mollie had found that water was sorely needed and with the water butt on her back and pewter pitcher in hand, was always to be found in the thick of the fray. "Here comes Mollie and her pitcher" was shortened to Moll Pitcher and as Laura Richards put it —

"Sweet honor's roll will aye be richer
To hear the name of Mollie Pitcher."

Now we come to the battle of Monmouth. It was one of the hottest days of the Revolution. Most of the soldiers were barefooted and from the spring, where as a child she had probably waded, Mollie Pitcher passed to and fro in the thickest of the fray. She saw her husband fall. The officer cried, "To the rear with that gun." At the words Mollie Pitcher who was holding her husband took his ramrod from his hand and said, "I'll take my husband's gun." The men were fired with fresh courage and Mollie stood by her gun.

The Rev. D. George Duffield expresses it:

"Moll Pitcher stood by her gun, sir,
She rammed the charges home, sir,
She made the British run, sir,
And on Monmouth's bloody field, sir,
A sergeant did become, sir."

How is Mollie Pitcher in action portrayed by people? In many ways. A woman of some sixty-six years told me, giving me an affidavit of it, that her grandmother's favorite story was one told by her mother who lived in New Jersey in the 1770's and had been sent to Monmouth's battlefield with other young people with all the provisions that could be raised for the triumphant soldiers. She had seen a crowd, and forcing her way as children will, she had been able to see someone she was told was General Green holding by the hand a young woman with touseled hair, torn petticoat, an old torn soldier's jacket, and a powder stained face. She could not hear what he said but she heard the men cheer for Mollie Pitcher.

The English on the set of historical plates of 1806 visualized Mollie in a flowing dress with white bodice, white stockings, and sandals, firing a cannon in a most ladylike manner. The same picture is used in the volume of "Women of Achievement." They seem to be copies of the steel engraving in Spencer's "History of United States." There was another picture of her in Headley's "Washington's Generals" in an old cap and short gown which must surely have hampered her action. The Chicago Tribune of June 23, 1929, contains an old color print of Mollie which was provided by Mrs. Daisy Wood Caswell of Chicago. This picture portrays her as a staunch woman of medium height. She wears a long red skirt, clean blue and white striped waist with white ruffled collar, neat white cap and buckled shoes. In the Mentor, July 1927, "The Three Girls of '76"—Margaret Corbin, Deborah Sampson, and Mollie Pitcher—she is depicted at the cannon with neat collar and cuffs and buckled slippers.

But look at her monument. There stands the real Mollie Pitcher, the type of the woman of that day who served her country at home or on the battlefield. Her face was obtained in an original way, now generally used. The late Richard W. Woods suggested a composite photo of the five nearest descendants and from that photo the face was moulded. Every part of her dress is historically correct.

The two sides of Mollie's character are seen in the bas-reliefs; the one Mollie, all womanly tenderness, murmuring gentle words in a crooning voice that made many a soldier think his mother's arm held him as he slipped into the next world. The other Mollie, all action. The cannon in front of her monument is a replica of the one she used. These cannon were made by a Cumberland County man. He carefully guarded his secret of manufacture, although offered large bribes by the English government.

Behind this monument, which was erected by the State in 1915, is a white stone erected July 4, 1876 by the citizens of Carlisle to Mollie Pitcher. This was obtained through the efforts of Mr. Peter Spahr who knew Mollie personally.

Mollie and John Hays came home like many other soldiers. John Hays died and Mollie married an old soldier named McCauley. We know she did scrubbing in the court house for among its archives is the receipt for her wages from 1811 to 1813. She also nursed and did everything to keep the wolf from the door.

In 1794 she heard the last echo of her greatness. When General Washington and Alexander Hamilton were in Carlisle they sought her out to pay their respects to the heroine of Monmouth.

When the cornerstone was laid for the new St. John's Episcopal Church, Mollie Pitcher was in the crowd watching the procession. One woman remarked to her friend—"It makes you think of war." Mollie said, "That isn't a patch of war. You should have seen the Revolution."

Another day a child fell into a mortar bed. Mollie pulled her out and carried her into a nearby house. She got a crock of milk, took off the cream and washed off the lime. The frightened mother hearing of the catastrophe hurried to the empty house to find Mollie rocking the soothed child, neatly bandaged, in her arms. When the mother thanked her, with tears in her eyes, she said, "That wasn't anything. Think of my boys in the war and I hadn't any cream for them."

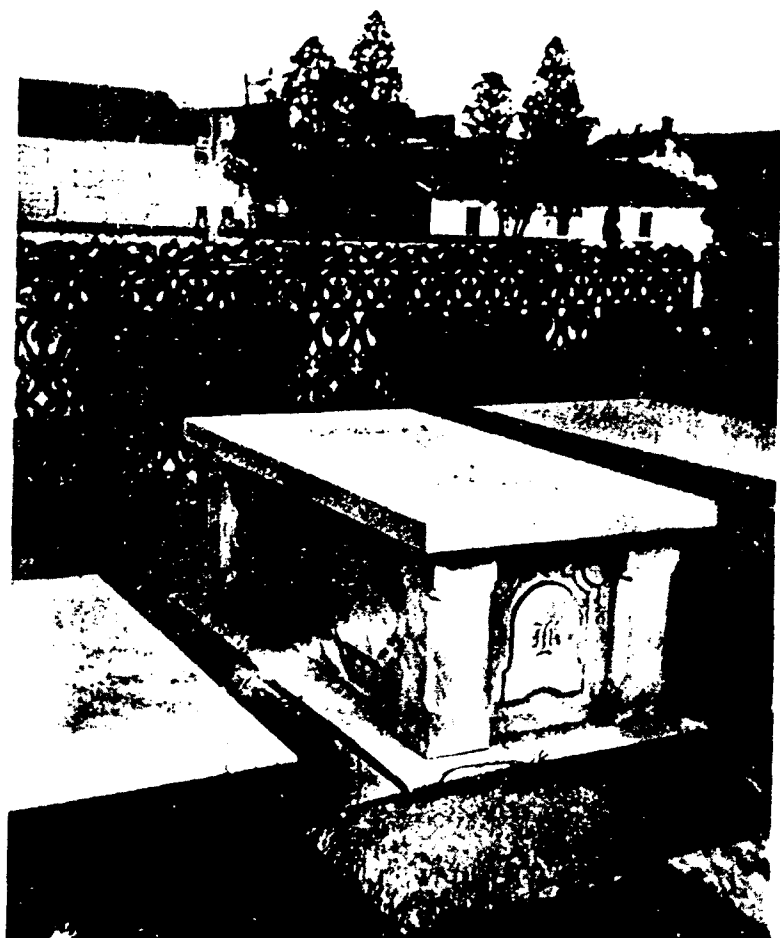

On February 21, 1822, the Legislature of Pennsylvania granted Mollie Pitcher a pension "for services rendered in the Revolutionary War" of $40 a year. In the list of pensions, hers was the only woman's that read "for services rendered."

Mollie died at the home of her son, John Hays, on the corner of North and Bedford streets on January 22, 1832. Her name will never die. In a large volume of Irish services in the Revolution we find they claim Mollie Pitcher. In the Pennsylvania German magazine, the late Dr. Sheaffer, so long head of the Educational Department of Pennsylvania, has an article claiming Mollie Pitcher as their own heroine. Mollie Pitcher of Carlisle? of Cumberland County? of Pennsylvania? No, of the United States.

Just at Mollie Pitcher's footstone is the grave of a little girl; the stone is inscribed "One who died (April 1836, aged seven years) singing, 'when I can read my title clear to mansions in the skies'."

Near Mollie Pitcher is the grave of James Noble who was born September 16, 1775; this stone marks the spot where he was interred September, 1836. It is so worded to show he was buried on his birthday. This man was said to have been the originator of an oft-quoted remark. When he heard of the deaths of Thomas Jefferson and John Adams which occurred the same day, July 4th, 1826, he said, "All the great men are dying, I don't feel well myself."

From here to the Hamilton lot is but a step, past the lonely Miss Holmes shut in her grandeur or disgrace. Judge Hamilton came to Carlisle from Ireland and brought with him all the English ideas of rank. He required the sheriff and tipstaves to escort him from his residence to his office. Finally the sheriff rebelled and had himself relieved by legislation. Not only the sheriff objected but the geese on the public square hissed as the procession passed. Their owners refused to destroy them feeling that until they found a goose that laid "The Golden Eggs" the feathers were worth something. Lewis the Robber, wishing to be released from the army as being under age employed James Duncan to be his attorney. They had great hopes of his release but Judge Hamilton decided against him. At first Judge Hamilton was very severe, and one morning on entering the court room he saw in large letters on the wall, "More leniency!" Later he became more kind and died beloved and respected by all. His son, James Hamilton, who died November 3rd, 1877, is too well known to need comment. There never was a time when "more leniency" needed to be written over his head. We must mention, however, his generosity. He left the ground and money to build the Hamilton Library, money to buy books for the school children, money to the Female Benevolent Society. The school house on East Pomfret street also bears his name.

The suggestion to take another building for an historical museum seems rank ingratitude, another spray snatched from the wreath of memory. It is said that republics are ungrateful and a close student of local history will find this indeed to be true. The result of good deeds may live but the names of the doers soon pass away.

In this same enclosure is the grave of one of the outstanding figures of the Revolution, General William Thompson. In the Bosler Library, in Carlisle, is his framed commission—the first one granted to the Continental army. His command included the men of Cumberland, York and Lancaster Counties. They were the first company to reach Boston from west of the Hudson and therefore were objects of much attention. Quite a number of the members of his command are buried in this graveyard.

A member of "The Cincinnati" has a monument in the Stevenson lot. "Dr. George Stevenson, son of George and Mary Stevenson, died May 8, 1829, in Wilmington, Delaware, aged 73 years and was buried in the Old Swede Church in that city. He served with disinction at the Battle of the Brandywine as a lieutenant in the first Pennsylvania Regiment and was afterwards, until the close of the war, a surgeon in the Continental Army. He became one of the original members of the society of the Cincinnati." His descendants have the invitation sent him by George Washington asking him to dine at the White House. His son, Dr. T. C. Stevenson who died in 1873 is too dear to the hearts of many to need a word to recall that closest friend, "the Family Doctor."

Gen. Wm. Thompson

Turn back to Mollie Pitcher, passing on the way the grave of "Lieutenant Nathaniel Smith of the Third Regiment, Pennsylvania line of the United States Army." Born at Carlisle, January 10, 1755, died at Carlisle, November 3, 1790. Pass the broken stone of the wife of Hugh Gallagher. Pass the grave of "Lieutenant Joseph Collier who served in the American Revolution from the commencement of the war to the end in 1785, with the reputation of a brave and faithful officer." Turn again to the path and going south, follow it past stones bearing familiar names. In some place along here lies unmarked Polly Meginnis who by her well-made cup of coffee kept the town from surrender. Pass the stone of Edward Loomis, U. S. N., who was killed in the wreck of the U. S. S. Huron, and keep on until turning east and then south you come upon two beautiful stones without inscription, the names alone, nothing else is needed.

Some one has said, "The mind of a teacher is best seen in the minds of his pupils." John L. Reed was born at Marsh Creek in York County in 1786. He was the son of William Reed of Revolutionary fame. He entered Dickinson College in 1806; became State Senator in 1815; was Presiding Judge of the 9th District from 1820 to 1839, and died January 19, 1850. In 1834 he was made Professor of Law at Dickinson College and the following are some of his pupils: George P. Hamilton, A. B. Sharpe, Hon. N. G. Curtain, Alfred Nevin, D. D., LL. D., Hon. T. W. Hughes, J. Ellis Bonham, Esq., Hon. Samuel Linn, Hon. James H. Campbell, Hon. J. C. Kunkel and Chief Justice James P. Sterrett of Pennsylvania; J. L. Carey and Thomas Spence of Maryland; Hon. W. N. Smithers, of Delaware; Hon. Alexander Ramsey of Minnesota and Hon. James Kelley, of Oregon. What must have been his mind when these names are picked at random from his class rolls.

Judge John L. Reed

The monument of his wife is graceful and beautiful. An enthusiastic child once said, looking at these stones, "Look at the gentleman and lady." "Carlisle Old and New" has a beautiful picture of his home before it was modernized into the residence of the President of Dickinson College.

Turn back diverging slightly to pass the grave of Dr. Johnson, President of Dickinson College in troublesome times, whose daughter in "Old Bellaire" has given a permanent picture of the old town in that period.

Formerly we would have seen the gate of the Hoffer lot, which had the design, so often noticed by visitors of the spirit whose light having gone out has covered its eyes as if in grief. Go on, but pausing on the way read, "Robert Moore, died November 14th, 1805, from a fall off a scaffold." His epitaph in the newspaper of that day gives a minute account of his stepping backward on a scaffold while doing some household painting.

The Craighead lot recalls a flood of stories connected with Parson Craighead to whose family this lot belongs. The Rev. John Craighead was very patriotic and in his sermons urged his hearers to join the noble Washington. Upon one occasion every person save one had arisen and promised to go or send a representative. This exception was an old woman, who rising to her feet, interrupted the enthusiasm by loudly calling "Stop! Mr. Craighead, I just want to tell you, again you lose such a purty boy as I have, you won't be so keen for fightin'. You're always preachin' to the boys about it, go and try it." Mr. Craighead soon after received his commission as captain and went and tried it. He fought and preached alternately or together as his duty called. At one time he was standing beside Mr. Robert Cooper. A cannon ball striking a tree near him almost knocked him down. "God bless me," said Mr. Cooper, "that almost knocked you to staves." "Yes," was the reply, "and though you are a Cooper you could not have set me up."

Four stones near here are worth reading:

1. "Alexander McDowell—July 23, 1860.

With noiseless tread,

Death comes on man.

No plea, no prayer, delivers him;

From midst of life's unfinished plan,

With sudden hand it severs him."

Dr. Herman Johnson

2. "Mary Blaine Wheaton — January 8, 1836; 15 years.

They that have seen thy face in death,
No more need fear to die."

3. "Jane Blaine, wife of James Blaine — April 15, 1793; aged 24 years.

Reader, behold and drop a tear,
Beauty's remains lie buried here.
But Heaven which lent the transient bloom
Hath bid the sun go down at noon.
Ye fair, since here may be your case
Forget the beauties of the face.
Go first in virtue's path and tread
Then safely mingle with the dead
And you'll with sister seraph join
Where Heaven's effulgent beauty's shine."

4. "Patrick Wallace—March 15, 1812; 75th year.

Death, thou hast conquered me,
I, by thy dart, am slain,
But Christ has conquered thee
And I shall rise again."

Near here is the grave of George Metzger, Esquire, who died in 1879. He was born November 19, 1782 in Hanover, York County, Pennsylvania. He attended Dickinson College when classes were held in a building on the south side of Liberty Alley between the public square and Bedford Street, which was long known as the "Old College." The site is now occupied by one of the public school buildings of more modern times. He left his estate of two acres on North Hanover Street with appurtenances, to hold the same in trust, as a fit location for a Female College, wherein to have taught useful and ornamental branches of education and cause to be erected on same premises, a building so planned as to make it suitable for educational purposes. To enable them to do so, he left to the trustees the sum of $25,000 and 600 shares of capital stock of the Pennsylvania Railroad for the use and benefit of the college.

Near here read the name of Miss Sarah Bell, a name well known and loved in Carlisle past. Nearby is an inconspicuous stone, that of the fighting parson, "Rev. John Steel, Minister of the Gospel, who died at Carlisle August 1779." This Rev. John Steel was a commissioned captain. He always went into the pulpit to fight either for body or for soul. The muskets were stacked in front of the pulpit. It is said, in the midst of service one day, word was brought of an Indian attack nearby. Pronouncing the benediction, he led his men; they pursued the Indians, rescued the prisoners, and returned for another service. After the signing of the Declaration of Independence, July 1776, the company in the lead to leave Carlisle was that in the command of the Rev. Captain John Steel.

On the way has been passed, not unnoticed, the stones of a man and wife, but with names spelled differently. John Heavener and the other Elizabeth, wife of John Hevner. Had they "agreed to disagree?"

A few years ago the third oldest stone in the yard would have been found along the west path. It read, "Here lies the body of John Vaughn who departed this life September 10, A. D. 1760; 74 years." Near this stone were at that time some stones of the Gustine family. Dr. Lemuel Gustine was one of the men who early in the town life came "To buy tomorrow's wisdom in the land,

Where currency was strange unto his hand."

He was a prominent figure at the time of the Wyoming Massacre. One day an Indian attempting to seize some apparel belonging to the Doctor was thrown by him to the ground. The Indians witnessing it, appalled by this courage and strength, handed the Doctor a rope, saying, "He is a drunken dog, tie him." Another of the interesting points about Dr. Gustine is that his sister is said to have married Archibald Loudon.

Where is Archibald Loudon buried? That man, soldier, author, publisher, postmaster and wit, gave Carlisle a prominent place in the world of letters. Thanks to the indefatigable energy of Captain William Miller, a number of his publications have been found and placed on the shelves of the Hamilton Library. To that same late Captain William Miller and John Miller, Esquire, are due the thanks for the files of the newspaper in the same repository; they were never too busy to help unearth forgotten facts; never too tired to assist the searcher for local history. From the press of Archibald Loudon, named "White Hall," came a book of interest especially at the present time. The writer of it should have been at Lehigh to join in the discussion on the capability of a woman's brain. This book was published in 1806. It is dedicated to the "Columbian Fair"; its name is "The Athenian Oracle or Ladies' Companion." The point in this connection is, that of the "Queries, Rebuses, and Mathematical Questions," of which it is comprised as many are written by women as by men. The book is the work of Samuel Tizzard, teacher of the English language and mathematics in Carlisle. Another book of interest is a volume of poems by Isabelle Oliver. Dr. Davidson says she composed them at her "daily avocations." Surely Pegasus stopped with the muses at the wash tub for this one, of which a few verses are given, "On the Banks of the Conodoguinet."

James H. Graham, LL. D.

"While underneath this salutary shade,
My hands performed their duty, O, my mind,
Be not inactive; let it not be said
A spark from heaven, to a sloth should be inclined.

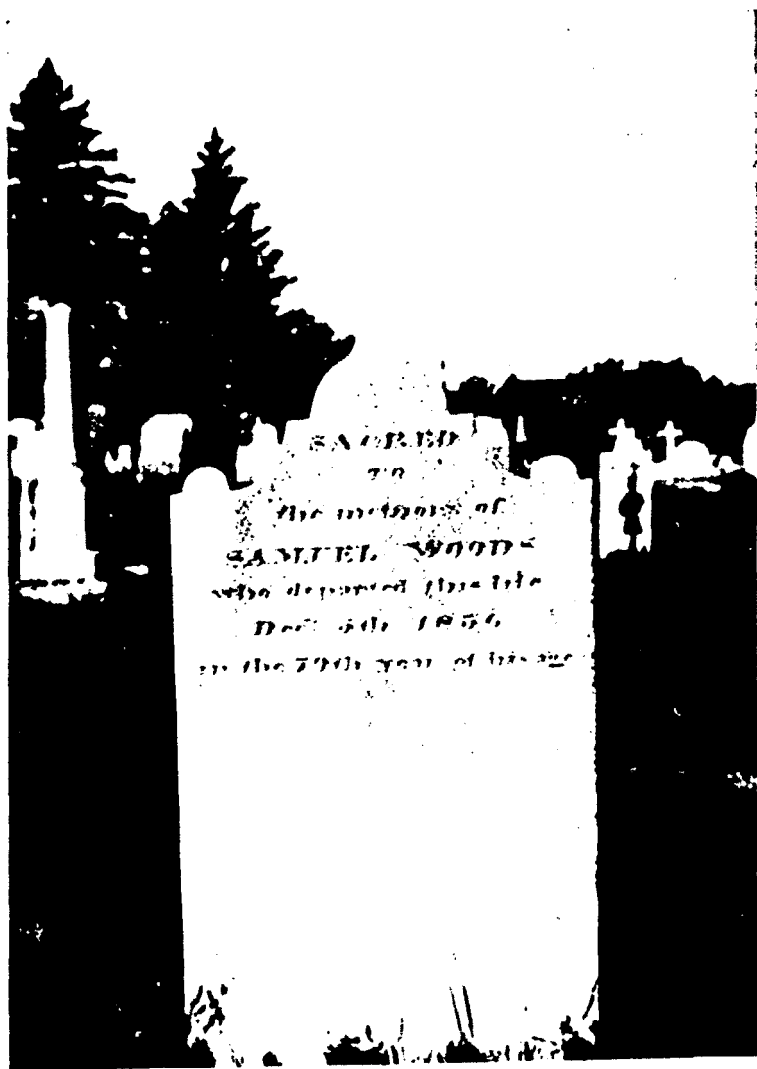

These hands with soap and water strive to clear
These outward robes from each polluting stain;
Sure then the soul demands superior care;
Shall it unwashed, unpurified remain?

For it a fount is ope'd, whose crimson strain,
Effects this glorious, this important end,
To this with speed apply, nor vainly dream
Of other aid, on this you may depend."

These names should be mentioned, even if their stones are not here unless you agree with the mother of a certain small boy. The boy had been kept in, as he weepingly explained, because he could not find Moscow on the map. "How unjust" said the sympathetic mama, "she must know it was burned down in 1812." So with these graves—they are here, although reported destroyed.

Near here are a number of Woods stones. One of these men, Mr. Samuel Woods, Sr., played an important role in the Revolution. He was born and died on the Woods homestead, "Lindenwood," along the Yellow Breeches Creek in Dickinson Township. He was the youngest of four brothers, William, Thomas, Richard, and Samuel, all of whom in 1781 were in the Cumberland County Militia under Captain William Swanson, it being the 7th in rank of 2nd Battalion—commanded by Colonel Thomas Gibson.

During the progress of the war of the Revolution he acted as an Indian Scout, a most perilous undertaking, in the service of the government, or in behalf of the neighborhood in which he lived, which was then the red man's home.

He was married to Frances Sterrett, daughter of Robert Sterrett, a Colonial sheriff of Lancaster County, and later active in Revolutionary service.

To this family also belongs the late Richard W. Woods who was instrumental in the passage of the Bible bill in Pennsylvania.

To the Gibson monument is a very short distance :

John Bannister Gibson, LL. D.

“For many years

Chief Justice of Pennsylvania

Born November 8th, 1780

Died May 2nd, 1853

In the various knowledge which forms the perfect scholar he had no superior.

Independent, upright, and able he had all the highest qualities of a great judge.

In the difficult science of jurisprudence
he mastered every department, discussed almost every question, and touched no subject which he did not adorn.

He won in early manhood and retained to the close of his long life
the affection of his brothers on the bench,
the respect of the bar,
and the confidence of the people.

His intimate friends forgot the fame of his judicial career in the most cherished recollections of his social character and his bereaved family dedicate this stone to the perpetual memory of the affectionate husband and kind father.”

On the stone is also the name of his wife, Sarah Work Galbraith, to whom he was married in 1812.

This epitaph was written by Judge Jeremiah S. Black. His purity of style is only equalled by his purity of truth ; his adjectives, only excelled by the character they describe. Judge Wm. A. Porter says that the name of Gibson in Scotland was Gilbertson. The earliest mention of the name in Pennsylvania is in 1730 when Governor Hamilton laid out Lancaster "at the site where George Gibson kept a tavern." This George Gibson was the grandfather of Judge Gibson. It is said that he was six feet, eight inches tall. It was supposed that he was buried at Carlisle. In the erection of this monument it was necessary to have a broad excavation and in making this George Gibson's grave was found. His family consisted of two sons and two daughters. His son George married Anna West, daughter of Francis West, a Colonial Judge and cousin of Benjamin West, the artist. Their son was John Bannister Gibson; his middle name was for a friend of his father's. Judge Gibson's father died in 1797 and left four sons. In poverty, this noble woman reared them herself, teaching them not only the ordinary branches but also the higher ones. A devout Episcopalian, Sabbath rarely found her absent from St. John's at Carlisle, fifteen miles from her home. One Sabbath unexpectedly finding Bishop White of Christ Church visiting in Carlisle, she persuaded him to accompany her home to christen some of her boys. When they reached Sherman's Creek, Perry County, no boys were to be found. Thinking their mother was away for a long time, they had gone hunting. Imagine the return.

John Bannister Gibson, LL. D.

Senator Smiley, the late member from Perry County, said in a tribute at the meeting held at the time of Ex-Governor Bigler's death (and gave proof of the truth of the fact), "It was the good fortune of the old house to have one room in which were born five men who have made their marks. John Bannister Gibson, Chief Justice of Pennsylvania; General George Gibson, Commissary General of the United States; Hon. John Bigler, who was made Governor of California the same year his brother was of Pennsylvania; Hon. William Bigler, the subject of this sketch and Hon. John Bernheisel who in after years adopted the Mormon faith and became the representative of the polygamists in Congress."

To you who think of Judge Gibson as only a lawyer and judge, these items may be interesting. As a musician he was gifted, probably inheriting taste from his grandfather, who, when the fife was injured in one of the Revolutionary battles, sheathed his sword, picked up the fife, and led his men to victory. Eye witnesses have told of the ease with which Judge

Gibson could tune a piano or an organ. Sometimes when a difficult decision was before him, he would lock his office door, and ponder with his beloved violin.

Of his skill as a painter, two proofs remain; a portrait of Pulaski on horseback which he painted when he was a lad of fourteen years; the other, his own portrait on a poplar board, at the age of twenty-one or two. He inherited this talent likely from his West ancestors.

One time, and then only at a lady's request, was he a poet. He calls it his first and last attempt. Two verses are given:

Retrospection

“The home of my youth stands in silence and sadness,
None that tasted its simple enjoyments are there;
No longer its wall rings with glee and with gladness;
No strain of blithe melody breaks on the ear.

But time ne'er retraces the footsteps he measures—
In fancy alone with the past can we dwell;
Then take my last blessing, loved scenes of young pleasure

Dear home of my childhood—forever—farewell.”

As a Mason he was R. W. Deputy Grand Master of the R. W. Grand Lodge of F. and A. Masons of Pennsylvania, elected St. John's Day, December 27, 1821, and re-elected December 27, 1822. He was elected R. W. Grand Master December 27, 1823; in this office he served one year. He was admitted as a Master Mason in Lodge No. 43, at Lancaster, December 20, 1811, but afterwards withdrew. Subsequently he connected himself with Lodge No. 61, at Wilkes Barre and was Worshipful Master of the Lodge for two successive terms, from December 27, 1814 to December 26, 1816.

An interesting story is told of him as a dentist. When he was seventy years old a friend in Philadelphia asked him where he purchased his beautiful teeth. Their appearance was so natural that they fascinated her. Her chagrin was great when the Judge replied, “You are mistaken, they are my own. I have used them from boyhood.” It was true. When his first tooth came loose, Judge Gibson fastened it by wire to its neighbors and continued to do so with loosening teeth until, as the Judge expressed it, he had “nothing to tie to.” The dentists in Philadelphia could offer nothing but a false set. Discouraged, but not defeated, he returned to Carlisle, and sought the aid of Dr. George Hendel, who is buried near him. Dr. Hendel was noted for his inventive resources and mechanical skill but could not think of a remedy; however, he offered the use of his tools and Judge Gibson after several experiments made a plate which held his own teeth. These he used until his death. At a meeting of dentists in Philadelphia, Dr. Hendel told of this, then unheard of achievement and Judge Gibson inspired by success often helped the dentist in his office.

As a doctor he prescribed for himself and others and was generally successful in his diagnoses.

As a maker of epitaphs read that which he wrote for Judge Thomas Duncan :

“Near this spot is deposited all that was mortal of Thomas Duncan, Esquire, LL. D., born at Carlisle, 20 Nov. 1760; died, 16 Nov. 1827 Called to the Bar at an early age, he was rapidly borne by genius, perservance, and integrity to the pinnacle of his profession; and in the fullness of his fame was elevated to the Bench of the Supreme Court of his native State for which a sound judgment, boundless stores of legal science and a profound reverence of the common law had peculiarly fitted him.
Of his judicial labors
the reported cases of the period are the best eulogy.
As a husband, indulgent;
as a father, kind;
as a friend, sincere;
as a magistrate, incorruptible;
and as a citizen, inestimable;
He was honored by the wise and good,
and wept
by a wide circle of relatives and friends.”
“Honestam quam splendida.”

Read also the inscription that was at one time on a stone in the Episcopal Graveyard at Harrisburg. The stone was placed there by Judge Rodgers and Judge

Gibson, the epitaph being composed also by Judge Gibson. In the "dead of winter," Joseph Jefferson, the younger, with chisel and hatchet cut the ice from the letters of these beautiful lines to his father:

"Beneath this marble are deposited the ashes of Joseph Jefferson
an actor whose unrivaled powers took in the whole range of comic character, from pathos to soul-shaking mirth.
His coloring of the part was that of nature, warm, pure, and fresh; but of nature enriched with the finest conceptions of genius.
He was a member of the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia,
in its most high and palmy days,
and the compeer of Cooper, Wood, Warren, Frances and a long list of worthies who,
like himself,
are remembered with admiration and praise.
He was a native of England,
with unblemished reputation as a man,
he closed a career of professional success,
in calamity and affliction, at this place
in the year 1832.

'I knew him, Horatio; a fellow of infinite jest, and most excellent fancy'."

Judge Gibson delighted in the drama. One stormy day at the hotel in Philadelphia, he was entertaining a group of friends with virtues of various living players in comparison with Shakespearian stars. "Gentlemen," he said, "there is one actor of the present day, whose fame is wide, but, I've never seen him off the stage. I mean, of course, Hackett." A door opened and a man entered, clad to his heels in a buffalo overcoat, on his head a muskrat skin cap and around his neck yards of "red comfort." Someone called,— "How do you do, Hackett!" Instantly, the Judge arose and going to the stranger said, impressively, "Permit me to introduce myself, sir! Have I not the honor of addressing Mr. Hackett of the stage?" "May it please, your Honor, not Mr. Hackett of the stage; but Mr. Hackett of the omnibus. I drive on Chestnut Street, and it's many a time I have driven you to old Independence Hall to hold Supreme Court. I jist stopped in a bit to get a little warrum." The Judge joined in the roar of laughter that closed the Shakespeare discussion.

Many instances of his humor at home, in society, and at court are told; often from the bench would come a remark like a flash of lightning that startled the audience.

For instance, a young man once insisted upon reading a petition for the writ of quo warranto in the Supreme Court. The Court wished to adjourn, but the young man insisted, saying, "I have a constitutional right to speak." "That is true," said Judge Gibson, "but the Constitution does not compel us to listen."

One of Judge Gibson's practical jokes is interesting as concerning "Pennsylvania's favorite son," and "Pennsylvania's greatest Judge." In the days when the Supreme Judges were on a circuit, a number of lawyers generally accompanied them. The limited accommodations for travellers made close quarters necessary. On one occasion Judge Gibson and James Buchanan were assigned the same room. The Judge retired early, but, Mr. Buchanan, in order to prepare some cases for the next day, kept the light burning and Judge Gibson awake. When Mr. Buchanan finished, exhausted, he was soon asleep. Not so the Judge, and, as the sleepless hours sped by, admiration for his friend's sleeping powers gave way to envy and this in turn to a desire for revenge. Within reach of his hands were the cords operating the Venetian blinds. These cords, if operated in a certain way, caused a sound like an irregular volley of muskets. This feat the Judge performed so well that Mr. Buchanan started up in bed crying, "Judge, what under heaven has broken loose?" As if just awakened the Judge said that no sound had disturbed his repose, Mr. Buchanan must have had the nightmare. Mr. Buchanan again sank into the "arms of Morpheus," only to be aroused again by the same hiss! crash! bang! Thoroughly frightened Mr. Buchanan arose and there was no more sleep for him that night. A volume of wit and humor could be filled with stories of this man who startled even Signor Blitz by his ability at turning the tables.

On the 8th of March, 1803, he was admitted to the bar on motion of Mr. Duncan. It is said that he was admitted to Allegheny County bar that same year, but as the Allegheny records are lost, this cannot be proved. His preparation had been thorough. At Dickinson College he claimed that Dr. Nisbet roused his sleeping intellect and spurred him to "whatever success he attained." Passing through the Representative Halls, on July 16, 1813, he was appointed President Judge of the eleventh district (Tioga, Bradford, Susquehanna, and Lebanon). Now, a different duty was his; as a lawyer he had been wont to plead; as a judge he must decide.

On the 27th of June, 1816, Governor Snyder appointed him to succeed Hugh H. Brackenbridge. This was the last stage of development for this intellectual man; so much did it mean that a critic in 1827 says, "his original style, compared to that in which he now began to write, was like the sinews of a growing lad compared to the well knit muscles of a man."

Elevated to the bench at the age of 34, he was and is noted as the "writing Judge" for he believed that with every opinion should be given the reason therefore. This makes his opinions as valuable today as when first given.

A visitor in Westminster Hall, London, was listening to an argument. One of the advocates quoted "an American authority" and the Chief Justice at once said, "That is by Chief Justice Gibson of Pennsylvania."

At the time of his death one of the many tributes paid him says, "He has materially assisted in laying the foundations and in building up the superstructure of our jurisprudence. Some of his legal opinions are masterpieces. If Massachusetts boasts of a Story and New York of a Kent, we in Pennsylvania may proudly point to the great intellectuality and profound legal learning of John Bannister Gibson."

Carlisle must have been fond of funeral pageants as is shown by contrasting the following two descriptions, the first taken from the Carlisle Gazette and West Repository of Knowledge, January 13, 1790. "On Wednesday evening last the remains of the late Robert Magaw were interred. The following is the order of procession:

Troop of horse, dismounted,
Music
Corps of Infantry, lately commanded by Col. Magaw Clergy
Physicians

The body-Pall supported by six gentlemen, late officers in the American army
Trustees and Faculty of Dickinson College Justices of the Court of Common Pleas Attorneys at Law
Students of Dickinson College
Officers of the county — Borough of Carlisle Services conducted by Dr. Davidson.

In a pouring rain the funeral of Judge Gibson was thus attended on May 5, 1853 :

Members of Masonic Lodge representing Philadelphia, Carlisle, etc.

The reverend clergy of the borough
Active Pall-bearers

Wm. M. Biddle, Hugh Gallagher,

Honorary Pall-bearers
The residue of the Carlisle Bar.
The family and relations.

Faculty and students of Dickinson College
Officers of the U. S. Army, stationed at the Carlisle Barracks.

The Citizens generally.
Services read by J. B. Morse of St. John's Episcopal Church.

Beside Judge Gibson lies his daughter, Mrs. McClure, who resembled him in the beautiful complexion that neither time nor sickness seemed able to alter, other than to make more beautiful. Her epitaph is strikingly true. "Gifted with a noble and generous heart, a brilliant yet kindly wit, and possessing a cultivated and enlightened mind, she never grew old." In the picture of Judge Gibson's monument her grave stone is plainly seen.

The small low stone in the rear is the oldest in the graveyard. It is that of Charles Robb, who was born, "Ye 4th day of Feby., 1734; departed this life ye 3rd day of May, 1757." Could he have belonged to the family of Peter Robb, famous in Lancaster County Revolutionary history? It stands at the head of the John Smith, Esq.

Restored by the Cumberland Co. D. A. R.

flat stone of Andrew McIntire who departed this life 1791.

In this same picture may be seen a Lyon monument, belonging to the same family as Colonel Samuel Lyon, Commissary of Cumberland County, who purchased the food supplies for the Continental Works at Carlisle. These works are supposed to have been at "Washingtonburg" (the present locality of the Medical Field Service School.)

Could the presence of these works have been the reason why William Denning selected Cumberland County in which to make the only wrought iron cannon ever made in the world? So great was this success that the English government took from the "Brandywine" a part of one and offered a life pension for the secret of its making. Denning refused to give to the "tyrant country" the information and so lived a life of toil. He died December 19, 1830, and is buried at Newville. The portion of cannon mentioned is said to be in London Tower, kept as a reminder that the early American could make his weapons as well as he could use them. The heat used in the cannon's manufacture was so intense as to melt the lead buttons off Denning's coat.

A short distance from here lies a lady, who in her youth administered to General Fitzhugh Lee a stinging rebuff. Let the general tell it. "On reaching Carlisle, I was sorry to find Baldy Smith in possession as that made a slight skirmish necessary. Remembering a young lady that I had much admired, when stationed at the Post, I concluded to send her word of her safety. Sending for a prisoner that had just been brought in and assuring him it was a personal note, I offered him his freedom for its delivery. He took it and departed. It merely told her that I remembered the situation of her home and would guard it. Back came the answer.

'Mr. Lee; In the suburbs;—Sir:

Your note is an impertinence. I would rather have my home destroyed than be under the faintest obligations to a traitor to his flag'." The general closed the story thus: "Thirty-five years change our point of view. She wouldn't call me a traitor, now—I'd write a pretty stiff note today to anyone who proposed to fire on the flag which Miss —— honored then. In fact," and his lips tightened, "I'd be apt to do more than write a note to him." Who sent the note? Many of you know.

Another stone, the name shall not be given, is of a woman of whom it is graphically said, "she choked to death on a chicken bone." The family recovered the stone (not the bone) and it is wisest never to interfere in family affairs.

Dr. Davidson's monument lies next on our walk. Dr. Erskine in his memorial of Dr. Robert Davidson, says, "He is buried in the old graveyard at Carlisle, and the brief and well earned inscription on his tomb is—

"A Blessed Peacemaker."

In memory of Robert Davidson, D. D.

A blessed peacemaker; as a pastor,
winning and affectionate,

The flocks over which he presided for 30 years,
Revered and loved him.

Distinguished as a man of science

He filled the chair of History and Belles Lettres,
First in the University of Pennsylvania and afterwards,
In Dickinson College of which he was for sometime vice president

Universally beloved and respected, he Departed this life in Christian hope,

Dec. 13, 1812, aged 63 yrs.

Beside him lies his wife Margaret, of a character equally amiable and of a piety equally pure.

"Margaret Davidson
wife of R. D., D. D.

March 27, 1809

38 years, 27 days.

Dear Dust, Adieu!

Till raised anew

Then joyful arise

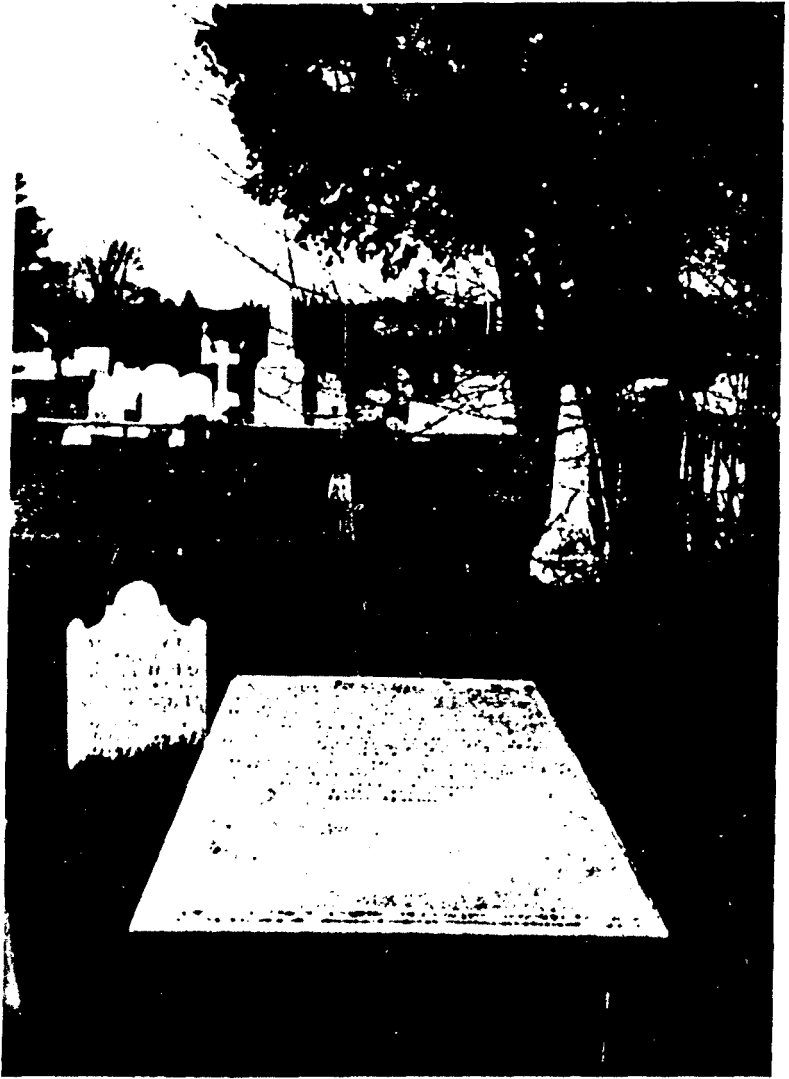

To beyond the skies."

On the foot stone is M. D. 1809 an infant son.

"In death united they wait

For Jesus to give them life."

In another part of the graveyard, near the Duncan lot. are two stones marked: Abigail Davidson, wife of R. D., D. D.—A. D. 1806, and Agnes Davidson, mother of R. D., D. D. R. D., D. D. seems to be Dr. Davidson's "hall-mark." He signed it to his writings, both manuscript and letters and evidently considered it all that was needed.

Robert Davidson, D. D.

His first wife, Abigail, he had married on his first entrance upon ministry, after her attendance upon him during a serious illness. He lived with her for more than thirty years; in 1806 she was killed by the overturning of a carriage at Carlisle. The circumstances connected with his marriage to her are thus related by his son: "While a student of Divinity, he was seized with a dangerous illness at a farm house in the country, and owed his life to the assiduous care of a daughter (Abigail) of his host. She became so attached to her patient that upon his recovery he ascertained there was but one way in which he could repay her. Such was his gratitude, and such his nice sense of honor, that, finding her happiness seriously involved, he married her; although she was older than himself, had not the slightest pretension to beauty, and moved in an humble sphere of life. She made him, however, for upwards of thirty years, an excellent and devoted wife."

A little farther on is the stone of:

"William Farley Carter,
Born in Albemarle Co.,
Virginia on the 16th day of Jan. 1796 — who died at Carlisle, Penna., 29th day of June 1813 — 17 years 6 months.
The tribute of respect by an adoring mother of the memory of an only and lamented son, who was justly and universally deemed an example of patience under corporal anguish.
Charity towards his suffering brethren and of fraternal affection and of filial love and duty."

This was as far as recorded, Carlisle's first "baseball victim." He was a student at Dickinson College and a fine ball player. After a strenuous game, he and his friends had thrown themselves down beside the spring to rest. They were hot and the ground was damp. A number of them, "his suffering brethren" and himself had rheumatic fever. From this he died. His sufferings were so great that his mother wished it placed on the stone. For a while what "corporal anguish" meant was forgotten but it has come to light.

Dr. Charles Nisbet, first president of Dickinson College, lies in the rear of this grave. It is but fitting that he should repose so near two of his pupils who especially loved him, Judge Gibson and Mr. David Watts. The first said of the epitaph written by Dr. Mason, "It is a modest but faithful delineation of the qualities of Dr. Nisbet's mind and the virtues of his heart." The other said, "It took Dr. Nisbet one-third as long to read a book as an ordinary individual and then he had it pigeon-holed in his brain."

The years between 1736 and 1783 made many changes in America. The colonists had become rebels; the rebels, patriots; the patriots, free Americans. To hold in subjection the powers so lately their masters, brain as well as brawn were necessary. The youth must be educated to take their place as wheels in the "machine of civil government." It was the choice of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, as the site for an educational center that gave it the honor of being the home of Charles Nisbet. In 1783 the charter was granted which founded Dickinson College. "Carlisle was chosen for good and solid reasons. The situation is healthy, scenery picturesque and beautiful. The inhabitants of the place, as well as the neighborhood in general are remarkable for the decorum of their manners, the purity of their morals, and their uniform observance of the duties of religion. Advantages like these are invaluable to an academical establishment to prepare youth to become great men or good and useful citizens." "We can secure some good brick buildings on the edge of the town from the government and are sure of financial support." Governor Dickinson gave "two plantations i. e., 300 acres in Adams County and 200 acres in Cumberland County, and above all his name." "The seal of our College? The device consists of a Bible, a telescope and a cap of Liberty — the two last placed over the first." The motto is Pietate et Doctrina tuta libertas. "They destine our College to be the first in America under your direction and government."

"It will be expected, nay, now it will be required of you for the benefit of your pupils, to preach every Sunday at Carlisle. Dr. Davidson who has the pastoral charge will fill a subordinate Professor's chair in the college and preach alternately with you." "Indeed, sir, every finger of the hand of heaven has been visible in our behalf." Such were some of the items that were in the letter that came to Dr. Nisbet, calling "to leave Scotland for America."

He had a comfortable home and easy access to libraries and lecture halls. Dr. Witherspoon and Dr. Nisbet's friendship was of the strongest — so strong that when on account of Mrs. Witherspoon's unwillingness, Dr. Witherspoon hesitated to accept Princeton's Presidency he suggested "you call Dr. Nisbet as the fittest man of all my acquaintance to be head of a college." At the time of the suggestion Dr. Nisbet was only thirty-one years old.

Dr. Nisbet finally decided to accept the call and sailed from Greenack, April 23rd, 1785; with fear, not cowardice; anxiety, not worry; hope, not buoyancy and above all feeling God called him to hew stone for the educational building in America. On the 9th of June they reached Philadelphia and "rested at the home of Dr. Rush." After a long ride, not in "rubber-tired" vehicles, they drew near Carlisle on July 4th. The surrounding country was celebrating "Independence Day." They sent a deputation, escorted by the "Troop of Horse," to welcome the "Scotch family."

On the 5th of July Dr. Nisbet took his oath of office and also that of allegiance to America. Dr. Nisbet's mental gifts were of the highest; they had been increased and disciplined by study and thought. At the age of sixteen he had attained a reputation that placed him at the Edinburgh University not only as pupil but as tutor. Judge Brackenbridge said, "Dr. Nisbet possessed nine languages and was acquainted with and used others." Judge Gibson states, "as a scholar he had no superior in America." In Scotland his name was the "Walking Library." A learned lawyer of Carlisle, one day quoted some lines of the original Greek from the Iliad. Dr. Nisbet said, "Well, mon, go on, what you left is just as good as what you gave." The lawyer said he knew no more. Dr. Nisbet thereupon rapidly repeated the remaining lines.

His pupils loved both Dr. Nisbet and his Scotch wife. They could not clearly understand her dialect but felt her motherly interest. Every student enjoyed his society; when his black eye began to sparkle they knew the intellectual lightning would soon flash. If reproof came it was so cutting that no repetition was needed; if praise, the recipient would immediately determine to deserve it. The best was developed and a student with “no best” soon left Dickinson College. Dr. Nisbet’s first class was graduated September 26th, 1787, nine young men and each his sincere friend. Of him as a teacher, one of his pupils said, “Dr. Nisbet seems to open a new mine of knowledge on every subject to which he turns his attention.”

Because of reverses, Dr. Nisbet resigned his position. Brave he was when he retracted, braver when he asked for re-election, bravest when he so nobly filled his position. A few opening lines of his address after his re-election show his moral courage:

“My young friends:—

After despairing even of life and renouncing all hopes of being useful to this seminary, it has pleased God to restore me to my former health and office. I hope it will be unnecessary to say anything to convince you of my good will to this country and to this college in particular. If abandoning an honorable and independent station, and renouncing the society of many valuable and long tried friends; if my crossing the vast Atlantic and exposing my life to the perils of a new clime are not sufficient to persuade you of my good wishes, it will be needless to use any words to that effect. The troubles and distresses of my family and the pains I have endured, both in body and mind, since my arrival in this country, I shall cheerfully forget, if I be subservient to the conducting of your studies and forming of your taste and morals so you may fulfill the hopes of your parents and prove useful citizens to your country.”

In 1803 the College was destroyed by fire — yes, say College — for building, books, globes, seats, tables, and all were burnt. Within twenty-four hours after the fire a subscription was started, “by the inhabitants of Carlisle, the surrounding country assisted.” Phoenix-like from its ashes rose “Old West” staunch and true as it stands today. Dr. Nisbet at this time wrote Lord Buchan, “I consider myself as engaged with others in the inglorious but useful labor of digging underground and laying the foundations of a building that may make some figure in a future age.”

Dr. Nisbet as a lecturer attained great success. On alternate days he lectured on moral philosophy, mental philosophy, Belles Lettres, and logic. These lectures were prepared the night before, merely a few notes jotted down and enlarged on by the speaker. Some divinity students asked Dr. Nisbet's advice as to further studies in theology. For them he prepared, wrote out, and delivered, slowly, in order that the hearers could take them down four hundred and eighteen lectures, every term day from October 31, 1788 to November 5th, 1791. Fortunate enough to have seen a set of lectures taken down by one of the nine students, we can see that they are marvels of thought and study. "This is the first set of lectures on Systematic Theology prepared in the United States." Dr. Nisbet was asked to give these lectures for publication. He refused saying, "I have drawn too largely from approved sources to call it original work."

Dr. Nisbet during his college life gave but two things for publication. One was the address delivered after his re-election; the other, "The Usefulness and Importance of Human Learning — a sermon — preached before the Trustees and Students of Dickinson College, met at Carlisle May 11th, 1786 and published at their desire — by Dr. Charles Nisbet." The text was given—"And Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians and was mighty in word and deed." The sermon is thirty-two pages long and every page is worth reading. It closes, "If Moses needed diligent application and various studies, though he had the gift of prophecy and working miracles; diligence must be much more necessary for you, who have no reason to expect supernatural gifts. Your parents expect that you will be diligent and much of their happiness depends on your success, and good conduct. May God Almighty incline your minds to the love and study of true wisdom, and turn all your labors to your benefit and that of the public that you may be qualified to fulfill and adorn every station and like Moses mighty in words and in deeds."

As a preacher, Dr. Nisbet had great power of thought and consecration. Among his private papers was found, after his death, a solemn vow dated March 10, 1756, dedicating himself to preach the Gospel. His texts were often chosen with a directness that "left no doubt of application intended." On taking leave of the congregation he had served two years, he was to preach a farewell sermon. This church had promised, when Dr. Nisbet was called, to furnish him with a house; the promise had not been fulfilled. The consternation can be imagined when he gave out this text—"And Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came in to him." For a "Public Fast" service ordered during the American Revolution he selected this text—"In the same hour came forth the fingers of a man's hand and wrote over against the candle stick—and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote—and this was the writing that was written Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin." The introduction ran thus, "we are this day called by our superiors to fast and afflict ourselves; and they have not called us to this duty until they have given us abundant reason to do so." On another "Fast Day" the town council of Montrose had as usual attended service in a body. Not liking the opening remarks they left the building; immediately Dr. Nisbet selected and announced this text, "The wicked flee and no man pursueth." This second charge, Montrose, was the gift of the King. It seems a strange coincidence that exactly twenty-one years after Dr. Nisbet received the royal signed manual, he took the oath of allegiance at Carlisle.

During the Whisky Insurrection Dr. Davidson and Dr. Nisbet decided to preach to the insurgents. Dr. Davidson in the morning gave a mild and judicious sermon; in the afternoon Dr. Nisbet preached from the text—"And that ye study to be quiet and do your own business, and to work with your hands as we commanded you." His meaning was so plain that his house was in danger of being burnt. Once in a sermon he said that "some people are like a man driven by every wind of doctrine having no stability of mind." Dr. Nisbet's charge at Montrose was so large that it took fifteen tables to serve the Lord's Supper. Often he walked twenty or thirty miles before breakfast in order to cover the parish. Dealing with these people, one of whose number prayed, "O Lord set me right, for Thou knowest, O Lord, that if Thou set me wrong, even Thou, O Lord, canst not turn me back" Dr. Nisbet learned the "habit of force and conviction" so needful to a College President.

Dr. Witherspoon and Dr. Nisbet had many an intellectual duel and generally Dr. Nisbet excelled. This is an example; Dr. Witherspoon asked Dr. Nisbet for his health.

Dr. N.—"I don't feel very well, I have a ringing in my head."

Dr. W.—“Don't you know what this is a sign of?”

Dr. N.—“No, sir, what is that a sign of?”

Dr. W.—“It is a sign, that it is hollow.”

Dr. N.—“Why, sir, does yours ever ring?”

Dr. W.—“No, indeed, never, never.”

Dr. N.—“And don't you know what that is a sign of?”

Dr. W.—“No, what is it?”

Dr. N.—“It is a sign it is cracked.”

Dr. Mason, afterwards a President of Dickinson College, asked Dr. Nisbet if he attended General Assembly. “Yes,” said Dr. Nisbet, “sometimes I go in for the benefit of hearing and then again I come out again for the benefit of not hearing.” Dr. Mason then asked, “Why, Doctor, which is the greatest benefit?” Dr. Nisbet's reply was, “Indeed, mon, it's hard to strike the balance.”

January 1st, 1804, Dr. Nisbet had a severe cold. It rapidly grew worse. His wonderful mental powers were unimpaired. On the seventeenth he tenderly called his wife's name and raised his hands as if in supplication and began a prayer, “Holy, Holy, Holy,—” God let him finish it beyond.

The College — the town — the country mourned.

Prof. James Ross composed a Latin Ode in honor of Dr. Nisbet which is often confused with the epitaph on his monument. This monument at his grave in the “English Graveyard” at Carlisle was erected by Mr. Alexander Nisbet; the epitaph was written by Dr. Mason. The translation here given is that of Chief Justice Gibson who says, “It is a modest but faithful delineation of the qualities of Dr. Nisbet's mind and the virtues of his heart.”

Sacred to the Memory of Charles Nisbet, Doctor of Sacred Theology.

Who by the unanimous invitation of the Trustees of Dickinson College,
That he might undertake the duties of Provost,
Emigrating from Scotland, his native country,
Came to Carlisle in the year of our Lord 1785
And there through nineteen years
With the highest approbation
Discharged his office.

A man, if such exists, of integrity and piety,
In all learning most accomplished,
Of reading immense, and memory faithful,

In real acumen of wit, pleasantry and satire
By universal acknowledgement, truly astonishing;
But to no mortal offensive, except to those Who under the cloak of philosophy, insult religion
But to his family and friends,
For manners, sweet, benign, cheerful, and social,
Beloved without a rival.
He gently breathed out his life on the 17th of Jan. 1804.

This epitaph leaves nothing to be said of what he gave America and Dickinson College but go to Princeton Seminary, see his library, and you will feel the pathos of his American home. His two grandsons, Right Reverend Bishop McCaskey of Michigan, and H. C. Trumbull, Esquire, of Maryland, presented it to the Seminary Library. It is small, curious, and select — Latin, Greek, French, German, Spanish, Italian and English. What deprivations in the way of literature this man must have suffered!

Lord Buchan said, "in giving up the personal companionship of Dr. Nisbet to assist develop America I made one of the greatest sacrifices possible." What this companionship was, can be judged by the fact that after Dr. Nisbet returned from a visit to Governor Dickinson he received notice that five hundred dollars had been deposited in the bank to defray his expenses for further visits. Once a year he made a visit at the Governor's expense, and the host and guests felt amply repaid. Our customs and times are so different that we cannot appreciate the sacrifice made by this cultured man and woman. What they founded stands today to show how well they builded. Read the beginning and ending of a tribute from a pupil. "The life of a mere man of letters is seldom rich in incidents; yet a well written life of this gentleman would not be destitute of interest even in this respect; it would at least abound in literary anecdotes growing out of an intimate intercourse with the most distinguished scholars of Europe. * * *

To those who are strangers to Dr. Nisbet this may seem a mere fancy sketch; but they who knew him truly will recognize the sober delineation of truth."

It is said, "a tree is known by its fruit." Fruits decay as soon as they ripen; autumn leaves retain long years their brilliancy and suddenly crumble; even pine needles break when old and brittle, but the heart of a tree unless diseased while growing, lasts forever. The dignity of a walnut; the grandeur of mahogany; the durability of oak; the polish of rosewood; the depth of ebony; the smoothness of satin wood; the softness of palmetto; the color of tulipwood; the glow of sycamore; the grain of pine; the spice of fir; the variety of maple; the fibre of arbor-vitae; all these traits and more are found in the heart of the sturdy Scotch tree transplanted to America.

The dust of years may apparently obliterate all traces, but accidentally brush it away, and clear and distinct as the finest mosaics shine out the characteristics of Charles Nisbet.

His son-in-law, Dr. Samuel McCaskey, is buried within the brown stone enclosure. He died September 4, 1818:

“Profoundly learned and skilled in his profession.

He was no less skilled in attaching the love and veneration of all.

Throughout the successful labors of a long and busy life,

His chief remedy was directed to the minds.

When skill failed to cure or attention to alleviate disease,

He was ever ready by his admonition and example to smooth the passage to the grave.

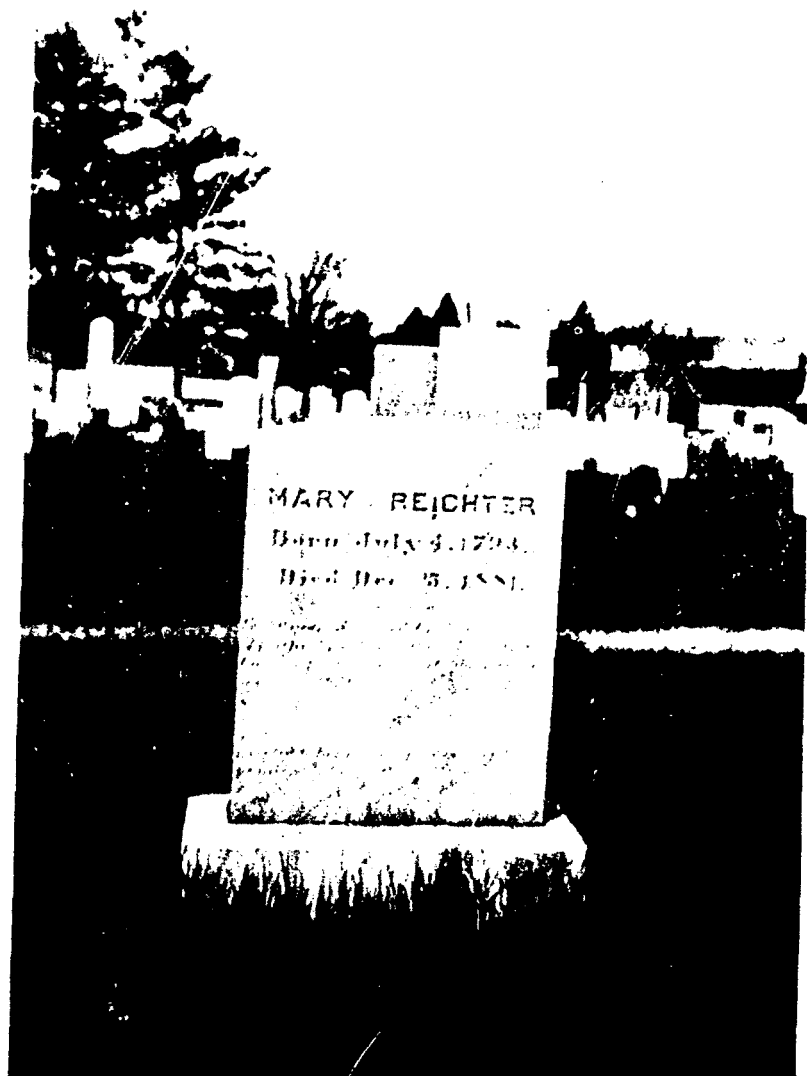

But vain mortal praise or blame.

He shall be recompensed at the Resurrection of the Just.”

Pass by the Weaver McCord lot where lies Mr. Robert Weaver, well known for his friendly words to many Carlisleers.

Walk by the oldest stone — that of Charles Robb, and go towards the path. Pass the stone of Philip, husband of Mary Wareham, also that of Mary Reighter, “July 4, 1793, — Dec. 5, 1881”; of whom it is told “for eighty years a devoted Christian; a faithful teacher in the public schools of Carlisle for thirty-four years.” This stone was erected through the efforts of Mr. A. D. B. Smead, the late Mr. John Wetzel, and others.

It is well fitted that her grave should be near the entrance to the Blair lot, where lies the first president of the Board of Directors of the Public Schools of Carlisle. Mr. Andrew Blair was a man in advance of his time; he would never have said to a boy what the Bucks

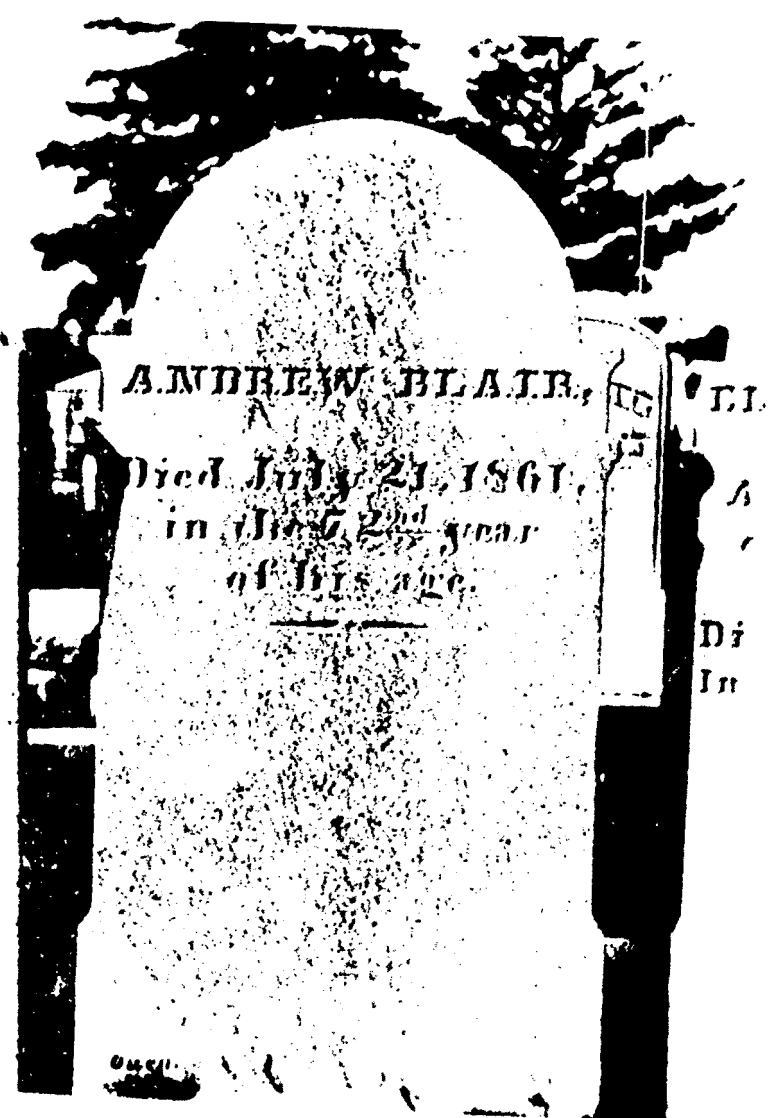

Mary Reichter

County farmer said to his son. This lad had been sent to the mill with a bag of wheat, which the father had always balanced by placing a stone at one end, but the more progressive son took out the stone and divided the wheat. Then he called his father and showed him the discovery. The farmer said, "Boy, put that stone back, my father and his father's father carried it; boy, you have a dangerous bent of mind." Instead of keeping people's loads heavy, Mr. Blair made them lighter. A life time spent in the house which he built, where the fire buckets hung, as staunch and true as when he first placed them there, has given opportunity to learn many of his characteristics.

The stone of Mr. Andrew Blair is dated July 21, 1861; 73 years. His character helped to give the Second Presbyterian church its orthodox foundation. He was always ready to aid the helpless and assist the homeless. As director, Miss Hantch speaks of him in her paper on the Carlisle Public Schools in the following manner. "Mr. Andrew Blair, President of the School Board from its organization in 1836, was kind, lovable, and fatherly in his attitude toward children; and to our youthful minds his face seemed already turned toward the sunset of life. He rarely asked questions, his manner was that of a father advising and encouraging his children to make the most of their opportunities. His face never wore a frown in the school room, and when he left, the calm of benediction seemed to descend on the reckless youngsters. He died in 1861, having served as president of the Board for twenty-five years." A former pupil says that he insisted on the girls learning to hem, gather, make button holes, and sew good seams, and he had them bring samples of bread to his home saying that a happy home depended upon neat sewing and good bread.

An interesting stone once stood in this lot; it was that of William Blair dated before the Revolution. At the time of the Civil War a grape shot went through it, leaving a perfect hole in the marble.

There are two William Blairs, Revolutionary soldiers buried in this lot. In the book of minutes of the Presbytery of Donegal for October 18, 1781, is the record that "William Blair with four other men from Carlisle, Penna., who were establishing an Academy in Carlisle, desired the Presbytery to take said school under its care and for some of the ministers of the Presbytery to act as trustees, which thing Presbytery consented to do. This school very shortly became Dickinson College and Wm. Blair with John Smith, John McCoy, et al. received from Richard Penn the deed to the plot on which the Associated Church stood, for six pounds sterling."

Between the south fence of this lot and the one next is the second oldest stone in the graveyard. It is hard to read, but, deciphered, this is the inscription, "John Kirkpatrick who departed this life the 27th day of April 1759."

Pause at the end of the path to look at two flat stones — Robert Miller, died Nov. 15, 1796, aged 73 years, and Captain William Miller, died Jan. 22, 1781, aged 25 years.

From the Blair, pass to the Lamberton lot, near the South Street gate, where not long ago rested a stone with the name Sara Lamberton. The stone is gone but the inscription should not be lost,—“In life she was a useful member of society in the paths of piety and virtue. In her association as a friend, always a friend. Blessed are such.”

The name Lamberton has always been prominent in Carlisle, Cumberland County, and Pennsylvania history. As lawmakers, postmasters, paymasters, soldiers in Army and Navy, professional and business men, each one filled the place given him.

One of Carlisle's first postmasters was Robert Lamberton. In those days the postmaster brought the mail by coach. One very cold day he was frozen so stiff that he had to be lifted from his seat, and his fingers holding the reins could not be loosened until they had thawed.

Years ago a Lamberton gave the Middlesex School District ground for a school house in order that the residents might have educational advantages.

More recently the Lamberton name became connected with local educational interests when Mr. Charles Lytle Lamberton left a large sum of money to endow a technical high school in connection with the Carlisle public schools. The Lamberton High School stands as a memorial to this generous donor. He was also the giver of a second fund, the purpose of which is to preserve local history. The interest of this money provides each year two prizes awarded the best high school essays, one by a boy and the other by a girl, on early history in the Cumberland Valley. It is interesting to know that the first year these local prizes were taken by two "real Carlisle children": the one by Miss Miriam Woods Blair, descendent of Mr. Andrew Blair and the other by Mr. John Ahl, whose ancestors established the early furnaces. Truly Charles Lamberton was to Carlisle, "once a friend, always a friend."

One of the most outstanding figures in Carlisle in the last generation was the late Rear-Admiral Benjamin P. Lamberton. When the American Fleet was in the harbor at Manila, he was on the Flag Ship as Chief of Staff. To him, after the battle, Admiral Dewey gave the perilous duty of carrying the terms—surrender and evacuation by noon—to the Naval Station at Cavite. Commander Wood had already trained the guns on the navy yard and was instructed to fire if Commander Lamberton had not returned within an hour since treachery was feared. The hour was perilously near its close when Commander Lamberton returned to the ship.

It is in keeping with his modesty that in recounting this, his most dangerous commission, he omitted the mention of his personal danger to tell this anecdote. A Spanish doctor was commissioned to act as interpreter. Upon him Lamberton was impressing the very great importance of an immediate surrender. The doctor thought for a minute, then said very deliberately, "We have been here for three hundred years, and it is inconvenient to move so suddenly." Thanks to diplomacy, however, the flag of surrender was run up before noon.

At the Commencement of 1900, the Carlisle High School had the honor of receiving their diplomas from the hands of this Carlisle hero. He is buried at Arlington as is fitting, but Carlisle will always recall with pride that Rear Admiral Lamberton called our town his home.

His daughter, Miss Mary Lamberton, through whose generosity this book has been made possible, is but carrying on the traditions handed down the fine old ancestral line.

Next comes the grave of Hugh Henry Brackenbridge, the Supreme Judge who preceded Judge Gibson, and to whom Judge Gibson acknowledged many kindnesses. Judge Brackenbridge started his public life as a chaplain in the Revolutionary War, licensed by the Presbytery of Newcastle. After the Revolution he left the ministry and entered the legal profession. He became famous as lawyer and author. His independence made him almost eccentric; his honesty was superlative.

He was absent one time from court when a decision was given that led the victim of the decision to ask for the impeachment of certain Judges. When Judge Brackenbridge heard of the matter, he asked to be impeached also for had he been there he would have been with them "on the question."

It is said that he saw his wife, when a girl, jump the horse she was riding over a fence, and that he said then, if she repeated the act, he would marry her; she performed the act the second time and when school days were over, they were married. It proved a happy and congenial match.

The Judge had many peculiarities; he was very fond of a shower-bath and had an iron grated cellar window, near which he would stand and have buckets of water thrown over him.

To judge of him as an author, read this, on the subject of duelling,—“I have two objections to the duel matter—the one is, lest I should hurt you; the other is, lest you should hurt me. I don't see any good it would be to me to put a bullet through your body. I could make no use of you when dead for culinary purposes, as I would a rabbit or a turkey. As to myself, I do not like to stand in the way of anything hurtful, I am under the impression you would hit me. This being the case I think it advisable to stay at a distance.”

One time he had so lampooned General Lee of Revolutionary fame that the gentleman pursued him to his home. When he had hammered the door for sometime, Mr. Brackenbridge put his head out of an upper window and asked his irate pursuer if anything was the matter. “Come down, Sir,” said General Lee, “and I will give you a good cowhiding.” “No, I won't,” responded Mr. Brackenbridge, “not even if you give me two.”

These quotations are given to show his peculiar disposition. Charles Dickens says, “a typical American will refuse to enter Heaven unless assured he can go farther West.” Judge Brackenbridge must have been a typical American, for he loved the western part of the state better than the eastern and always moved with the frontier.

Lying near him are the Dennys, the family from whence came Pittsburgh's first mayor. At the age of thirteen, Ebenezer Denny carried important messages to Fort Pitt "through a wilderness teeming with savage foes." After his return to Carlisle, the memory of his country's need stayed with him so constantly that he determined to leave boyhood behind and join the ranks. The emblem on the Denny stone, which was later adopted by the Murrays and the Simpsons is characteristic of the man—the willow tree covering and protecting the land it claims, bending over in a storm only to rise unharmed. Proud is Carlisle to have been the cradle of this family.

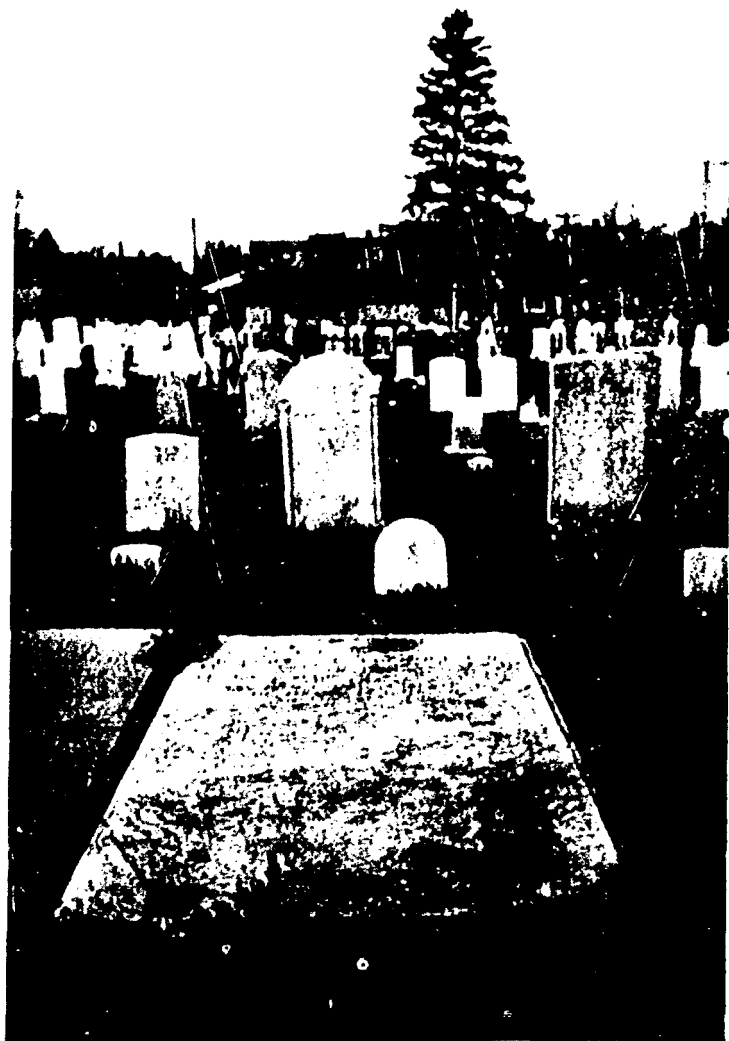

From here go to the Armstrong lot. In this so many old stones are found that it is hard to tell which to select. Take the oldest: "Gen. John Armstrong, eminently distinguished for Patriotism, Valor, and Piety, Died March 8, 1793, 77 years, son of James Armstrong, of Brooklow County, Formanough, Ireland." His wife, Rebecca Lyon, born at Enniskillou, Ireland, May 21, 1719, died at Carlisle, Nov. 16, 1797.

From the time John Armstrong came to Carlisle, he played an important part in every phase of its life—religious, civil, educational, and social.

He commanded the Kittanning Expedition, Armstrong County, 1750; commanded the Pennsylvania troops at Fort Duquesne; was Brigadier General, Continental Army, Feb. 29, 1776; was Major General of Pennsylvania Militia, June 5, 1777; served as member of Continental Congress, 1778, 79, 80, 87, 88.

Dr. Wing tells us that "he came from Ireland in 1748, a well educated and energetic man, and extensively employed as Deputy Surveyor for the County of Cumberland, and at that time having a commission as a Justice of the Peace." Col. Forbes' tribute to General Armstrong is: "not excluding General Washington, he was the finest man I have ever known." An English traveller spent some time in Carlisle while it was yet an English colony. His friends asked him what he had done with himself in that town that had not any social life. He said that to spend an evening in the company of Mr. Wm. Thompson, Mr. Robt. Callender and others of their friends, made up for any lack of other social life.

General John Armstrong, Jr., son of this General John Armstrong, married Alida Livingston, who took him to the Livingston Manor—now Tarrytown-on-Hudson. Their daughter, Margaret, married William B. Astor. In this way, General John Armstrong was the ancestor of Vincent Astor. In the Episcopal church at Redbrook above Rhinebeck the late Col. John Jacob Astor erected a memorial to his ancestor, General John Armstrong, the second, of Carlisle Pennsylvania, as stated on the base.

Gen. John Armstrong

Mary, daughter of George Stevenson, Esq., wife of Dr. James Armstrong, died May 27, 1813, 47th year, is noted by Dr. Nevin as being able to say the Longer and Shorter Catechism, with proofs, without the book. Probably the woman who visited Carlisle in 1823 and wrote the following had met her descendents:

“There is not a night or week but there is a meeting in Carlisle, upon some pious purpose. Where is fashionable, gay, learned Carlisle gone, it is all the fault of Catechism.”

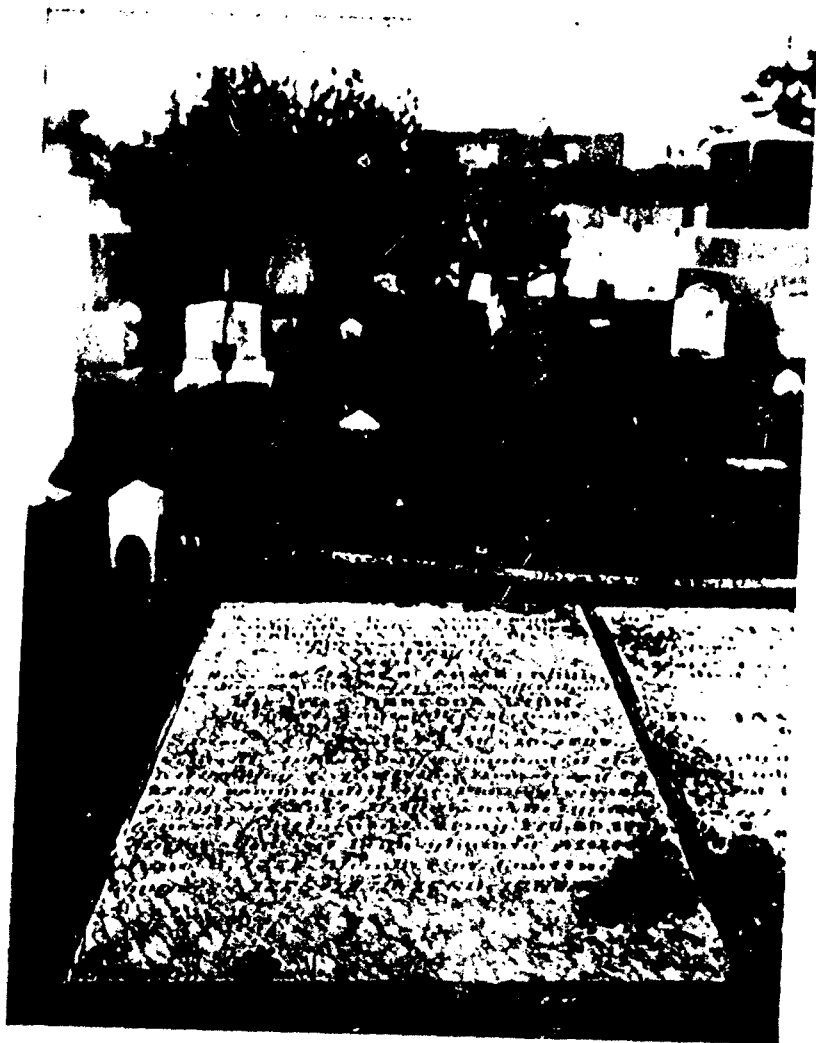

Let us pause by the Officer lot, the artist family that painted beautiful portraits, some of which adorn the walls of Carlisle homes. John Officer was President of Carpenter's Union which was established in Carlisle in 1795.

Read, then, of Robert Callender, that famous colonial hero:

“The testimony of a good conscience were his reward,
The love and esteem of all good men his glory.
In the 29th day of July, 1776 he died as he had lived,
An honest man.”

Beside Robert Callender lies Captain John Steele and his son, Lieutenant John Steele. These stones are often confused with that of Reverend John Steel in another part of the graveyard.

But we cannot tarry longer although many important tombs remain unnoticed. Here they rest in Carlisle's Westminster Abbey. Over them is the dome of the eternal Heaven, frescoed by the promising tints of dawn, and the finished hues of sunset; lighted by the sun by day and by moon and stars in the night. These rulers were not clad in the purple of royalty but in the garb of a republic; the judges wore not the ermine of courts, but the cloak of charity; the doctors were not hide-bound by prejudice, but free-handed in practice; the teachers not full of pedantry, but gave freely of their store of knowledge; the soldiers did not carry their swords in jollification but as a weapon of protection; the men and women were not painted puppets, but real characters.

You say these are legends. What are legends but framed facts? Frame them and preserve them. If that is not done soon, where will be Carlisle's history? We shall soon be told Regina was a myth; Forbes never passed through Carlisle save in a dream; Washington never drank a cup of tea in its precincts; the Whiskey Insurrection was but a nightmare; Wilson never breathed the Cumberland Valley air; the Hessian prisoners never crossed the Susquehanna; Bonaparte, the younger, never passed through the town; Le Tort for whom the spring is named never lived beside its waters; no chief justices are buried in our "city of the dead"; Carlisle was never shelled. Gone will be all those old stories that have made our quaint little town.

Let us guard our history, not destroy it. Treat it as a sacred trust, not as a specimen. Too often it is treated as such. With a defective lens the time-made cracks are magnified. Suspicion's weed is planted. It grows apace. Time passes on. Those who know the truth pass on also. When the next generation turns memory's page, what will they read? To your children and mine let us pass on—our history.

Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath;
Can Honor’s voice provoke the silent dust
Or Flatt’ry soothe the dull cold ear of death.

Full many a gem, of purest rays serene,
The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear;
Full many a flower is born to blush unseen,

Some village Hampden, that with dauntless breast
The little tyrant of his fields withstood;
Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country’s blood.

Far from the maddening crowd’s ignoble strife,
Their sober wishes never learned to stray;
Along the cool sequestered vale of life
They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

No farther seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
There they alike in trembling hope repose,
The bosom of his Father and his God.”

THE MARKET HOUSE PUMP

By Sarah Woods Parkinson

There is a legend the old folks tell
That he who drinks from the Carlisle well
Will never rest 'til he turns back
There, again, his thirst to slack.

The stone curb to the pump gave way.
The pump, too, disappeared one day;
Well walled-in was the staunch old well
But it kept in its heart its magic spell.

And there, beneath the hard-paved street
It listened oft to the passing feet.
But it listened in vain for the moccasin foot,
It listened in vain for the settler's boot.

It listened in vain for the soldier's stride
When saying farewell to his fair young bride
Axe in belt and rifle in hand,
Went to the West with Armstrong's band.

It listened in vain for the vows of love,
Whispered by youth and maiden above,
As they leaned to see in the water below
Their faces together — an omen, you know.

Listened in vain for the pump's rattling chain
Listened in hopes of hearing again
Scholar and sage stop in their walk
And while they drank, of learned things to talk.

Listened in vain for the school boy's gay call
As he filled the pail for the old school hall,
Then said, "I am forgotten, I know
All is gone with the long ago."

Then, gave a leap as a voice low, but clear
Said so distinctly to someone quite near
"When I come to Carlisle, right here I pause
The reason why is just because

On this very spot a well once stood,
And later a pump with a wooden hood,
But the charm of its water remained the same,
A charm that gave it a well known fame."

The stories I tell I know are true,
For those who told them really knew
The truth of the legend the old folks tell,
That he who drank from the Carlisle well
Would never rest 'til he turned back

DRIPPINGS FROM THE CARLISLE WELL

This little appendix is given this title, for it is but the drippings from the inexhaustible well of Carlisle's literary, civic, and commercial life. These were selected at random from a shelf of local writings. They are by people buried in the graveyard, or concerning people buried there. It should be noted that the names of Miss Annie Hantch, author of "Regina," and of Mr. Jacob Stock, author of "Arbor Day" and "Fiftieth Anniversary of Public Schools" do not appear in the printed list. When that was made, both were active in the educational, civic, and social life of the time.

May it please your Hon^r:

Your Hon^r's kind Offer to procure my Satisfaction from the Assembly for the Services I have done the Province, relating to Indian Affairs requires my most hearty Thanks.

I leave it entirely to the Consideration of your Hon^r: and the Assembly what Sum you think reasonable to allow me for my Trouble in sending Expresses concerning the Transaction at the Swightleea Town, and the late Action between the French, and our Soldiers under

I shall be satisfied with it. I shall always be ready and willing to serve the Government in any Thing that lays in my power and they please to subscribe myself.

“Carlisle, Nov. 4, 1756.

May it please your Hon :

This day I received advice from Fort McDowel that on Monday or Tuesday last one Samuel Porry and his two sons went from the fort to their plantation and not returning at the time they proposed, the commanding officer there sent a corporal and fourteen men to know the cause of their stay, who not finding them at the plantation, they marched back toward the fort and on their return found the said Porry killed and scalped and covered over with leaves; immediately after a party of Indians in number about thirty, appeared and attacked the soldiers who returned the fire and fought for some time until four of our people fell, the rest then made off and six of them got into the fort but what became of the rest is not yet known, there are also two families cut off but cannot tell the number of people. It is likewise reported that the enemy in their retreat burnt a quantity of grain and sundry houses in the .

As Col. Armstrong is now absent I thought it my duty to represent your Hon. the hardships and difficulties that in all probability will arise by means of the contract entered into by the Commissioners with the persons who are to the Battalion on this side Susquehanna. The men are allowed only one pound of beef a day which is half a pound less than their former allowance wherewith they are very much dissatisfied and the more so because the most of the beef cattle which the buy here are very young and small, and cannot be called beef such as is commonly bought for the use of soldiers. They also weigh off to the troops all the necks, and shins of this ordinary stuff, which I am informed is not done among the Regular troops where they have the best beef that can be got. The Commissioners have also ordered that six months provision at the above rate shall be delivered to the Commanding officer of each company without making any allowances for wastage, but say that if they fall short that the officer shall make good the deficiency. I humbly that it will be very disagreeable to me and the other officers to comply with those instructions and must beg your Hon. pardon for saying I cannot submit to them particularly ordered by your Hon. or the Col. I am

. . . . Most Obed. and most humble servant

P. S. I have not quite completed the Eighth Com. but hope in a few days to have it full. I cannot get either arms or blankets from the other companies for them.

REGINA IN VERSE

By Miss Annie B. Hantch

1839 - 1927

In a fair sunny vale where hills purple and blue Wore the robes that were dyed in the sunlight's bright hue,

Where grandly, sublimely, they rolled up on high
And massed their rich verdure against the blue sky,
Where old Kittatinney supreme on his throne
Called mountain and valley and streamlet his own,
In the lone silent wilderness, homely and sweet,
Sat a quaint little town at the old monarch's feet.

Astir was the village, though oftimes before,
The stranger and alien had stood at its door,
But so ghastly a band had ne'er yet been seen
As the captives who wearily sank down on the "Green."
Through forest of maple and sumac and pine,
O'er boulders and rocks and poison-steeped vine,
Footsore and weary they wended their way
And entered the town at the dawn of the day.

There were maidens who should have been buoyant and bright,
Now broken with toil and so weary of life,
And the little wee child, child only in years,
Had grown old in the service of terror and tears, —
No longer a child, but a terrified sprite
Born anew in the throes of captivity's night.

Apart from the throng, grief stricken and dumb,
Stood a mother, full many a league had she come
To seek 'mid the captives this bright autumn day
A lamb from the home cot once carried away;
Now wild with despair, now aglow with fresh hope,
Her eyes sought for signs that kinship betoke,
Eagerly sweeping o'er brown limb and face,
Hopelessly, longingly, seeking some grace,
Some symbol or sign of the pale blond race.

In vain was the quest: so near yet so far,
Were mother and child when the gates stood ajar,
For the eye of the maid, once heaven's own blue,
Had caught from her soul a sombre hue;

PUBLIC SQUARE IN CARLISLE

As seen on entering from the east. On the left are the Court House, Town Hall, and Methodist Church, on the main street. On the right, in the foreground, is St. John's Episcopal Church, and on the other corner of the square is the First Presbyterian Church, prior to 1840. Somewhere on this square Indian captives were restored to their friends.

Her hair, once bright as the daffodil's crown,
A dark and lustreless mass hung down;
The lily and rose, once abloom on her cheek,
The noon heat of anguish had seared as a leaf.
No marvel the mother through tears failed to greet
The yellow-haired child that once sat at her feet.

To and fro 'mid the crowd in gay scarlet coat,
With his trappings of brass and his red plumed toque,
Rode Colonel Bouquet, of Fort Duquesne,
A soldier of Britain in King George's reign;
And the light of the sun on his polished lance
Was no brighter nor keen than his friendly glance
As he gave to that mother a strong brave hand,
And led through the ranks of the captive band.

Hither and yon, — 'tis the quest of despair!
Pines her child in the heart of the Indians' lair,
Or hath the grieved soul fled earth and its ills
To leave its deep wounds in cool flowing rills,
In the shadow and strength of eternity's hills?

"Sing," said the soldier who walked by her side,—
"Song calls back the soul drifting out on death's tide;
A psalm of thy country, a song of thy youth,
'Twill wake in her soul white purified truth."
And scarce had a line in rich German tongue,
Attuned to soft melody, sweetly been sung,
When a long startled cry, like the call of a bird,
Or hound-hunted stag on the stillness is heard,
And the voice of the captive, mute, silent so long,
Filled earth to the sky with its volume of song.

"God be praised, she is found," said the on-looking crowd,

"God is good," said the soldier, "He hath lifted the cloud."

Mother arms a brown maiden in ecstasy clasped.
But the yellow-haired child was a dream of the past.

I know not if roses, pure white or bright red.
The bloom of brave York or bold Lancaster shed O'er the race of the Captain who waved his plumed toque

Mid the cries and tears of the good village folk,
But I know his heart shed, without sting, without greed
The pure white bloom of a beautiful deed.

Our song hath been sung, 'tis a lay of the past,
The silent, mysterious, long-vanished past,
And the hand that has swept o'er the harp's golden strings
True rhythm today from that olden time brings.

"FIRST CHURCH"

Congregation in 1734 worshipped at Meeting House Springs.

STAND UP! STAND UP FOR JESUS!

The writer of this hymn was Rev. George Duffield, born 1818, during his father's pastorate at this church, from 1816 to 1835.

- 1 Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
Ye soldiers of the cross;
Lift high His royal banner,
It must not suffer loss;
From victory unto victory
His army He shall lead,
Till every foe is vanquished,
And Christ is Lord indeed.

- 2 Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
Stand in His strength alone;
The arm of flesh will fail you—
Ye dare not trust your own;
Put on the gospel armor,
And, watching unto prayer,
Where duty calls, or danger,
Be never wanting there.

- 3 Stand up! stand up for Jesus!
The strife will not be long;
This day the noise of battle,
The next the victor's song;
To him that overcometh,
A crown of life shall be;
He with the King of Glory
Shall reign eternally.
—Rev. Geo. Duffield, Jr.

THE FIRST PROTEST OF LIBERTY

In a letter from Col. Armstrong, dated Carlisle, June 30, 1757, he said:

“To-morrow we begin to haul stones for the building of a meeting house on the north side of the square The stones are raised out of Col. Stanwix’ entrenchments”

It is an interesting fact that the stones in the old Guard house at the Post, and part of the stones in the First Presbyterian Church are of the same texture, and capable of carving, similar to marble or wood. Col. Stanwix’ reinforcements were made from stone taken from the ledge of rocks now underground near the County Home. The late Rev. Philip McCard gave this fact and had samples from this ledge which he himself had gotten.

Many interesting meetings occurred in this old church, but the most important was the Proclamation of Protest, July 12, 1774. From Dr. Wing’s History of Cumberland County is quoted the following:

“That a committee be immediately appointed for this County to correspond with the Committees of this Province or of other Provinces upon the great objects of the public attention; and to co-operate in every proper measure conducing to the general welfare of British America.

This meeting was presided over by John Montgomery.

Another quotation from Dr. Wing’s History of Cumberland County:

“From being loyal subjects large numbers had now become determined enemies. They could no longer bear to see delegates in Congress who would gladly vote for independence bound by instructions which had become out of date. Among the first meetings in the province to produce a change in this state of things was one held in Carlisle early in May 1776. In that meeting which was said to have been large and influential, a memorial to the Assembly was unanimously adopted, alleging that in the opinion of the freemen of this county the safety and welfare of these colonies rendered separation from the mother country an absolute necessity; and a formal request was made "that the last instructions which the Assembly had given to the delegates of this province in Congress, wherein they are enjoined not to consent to any step which may cause or lead to a separation from Great Britain, might be withdrawn." This memorial was presented to the Assembly on the 28th of May, 1776, and after a long debate was referred to a committee to bring in new instructions to the delegates in Congress. The instructions reported by this committee are almost in the exact words of the memorial from this county, but the utmost that could be obtained from a majority of the Assembly was the adoption of a resolution that since the time at which their last instructions had been given (November, 1775), "the situation of public affairs has so greatly altered, that we now think ourselves justifiable in removing the restrictions laid upon you by those instructions." As this memorial was presented to the Assembly on the 28th of May, the meeting in the distant county of Cumberland must have been held some time before the 20th of May, when the celebrated Declaration was made at Mechlenburg, North Carolina."

Elizabeth H. Clarke, in the Lamberton Prize Essay of 1928 gives the Proclamation of Protest in detail and from that we quote the following:

"Thus it was in this stately church, that meeting of freemen was held which aroused such great patriotism and spirit—that same spirit which was, in a few short years, to bring the issue of the Declaration of Independence and Liberty and Freedom to all Americans."

THE SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI

Contributed by George Plank Gloss

The year, 1783, brought the close of the Revolutionary War in America; it brought the beginning of a "new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal;" and it brought with it new problems; problems of disbanding the army; problems of government, finance, re-construction after the war; and principally the problems of a Constitution. All through the States new forces were working, new ideas were evolved; the whole country was trying its wings in self-government. Soon the leaders of these States were to assemble in the various "Congresses" to expound these new ideas and to incorporate the best of them in a Constitution.

It was in this year, 1783, in the army cantonments along "Hudson's river" that a new society was formed, the "SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI." Orders for disbanding the army had just been received, and army officers felt that memories of this great triumph over the British should be kept alive by an active and philanthropic society formed of the men—those not only of the States, but of the European countries who had sent aid, — who had fought together and triumphed together. For this reason, the classical inspiration for the society, and the man for whom it was named was "that illustrious Roman, LUCIUS QUINTUS CINCINNATUS," because these American officers, "being resolved to follow his example, by returning to their citizenship, they think they may with propriety denominate themselves, THE SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI." The outstanding traits of the society were the political character of its Constitution, the military character of its membership, and a theory of primogeniture in regard to perpetuation of the membership of the society; its great value was in its patriotic and philanthropic purposes and ideals. The principal reason for the formation of the society was "To perpetuate—as well the remembrance of this vast event," (The Revolutionary War) "as the mutual friendships which have been formed under the pressure of common danger, and in many instances cemented by the blood of the parties, the officers of the American Army do hereby, in the most solemn manner, associate, constitute, and combine themselves into one SOCIETY OF FRIENDS, to endure as long as they shall endure, or any of their eldest male posterity, and in failure thereof of the collateral branches, who may be judged worthy of becoming its supporters and members;" while the basic principles as stated in the Constitution are as follows:

"An incessant attention to preserve inviolate those exalted rights and liberties of human nature, for which they have fought and bled, and without which the high rank of a RATIONAL BEING is a curse instead of a blessing.

"An unalterable determination to promote and cherish, between the respective States, that union and national honor, so essentially necessary to their happiness, and the future dignity of the American empire.

"To render permanent the cordial affection subsisting among the officers. . . . This spirit will dictate brotherly kindness in all things, and particularly extend to the most substantial acts of beneficence, according to the ability of the Society, towards those officers and their families, who unfortunately may be under the necessity of receiving it."

The order of the society, "by which its members shall be known and distinguished, shall be a medal of gold, of a proper size to receive the emblems and suspended by a deep blue riband, two inches wide, edged with white, descriptive of the union of America and France, viz :

"The principal figure, Cincinnatus — three senators presenting him with a sword and other military ensigns — on a field in the background, his wife standing at the door of their cottage — near it a plough and instruments of husbandry.

“Around the whole,

SOCIETAS CINCINNATORUM,
INSTITUTA A. D. 1783.”

The General Society shall meet on the “FIRST MONDAY IN MAY annually, so long as they shall deem necessary, and afterwards at least once in every three years.” As for funds “which may be respectable and assist the unfortunate, each officer shall deliver to the Treasurer of the State Society one month’s pay, which shall remain forever to the use of the State Society — the interest only of which, if necessary, to be appropriated to the relief of the unfortunate.

“Donations may be made, by persons not of the Society and by members of the Society, for the express purpose of forming permanent funds for the use of the State Society, and the interest of these donations appropriated in the same manner at that of the month’s pay.”

The above Constitution of the Society shows it to be typical of the eighteenth century romanticism, patriotism, national self-consciousness, and idealism. Romanticism expresses itself in the elaborate ceremonial attached to the society, in the selection of the classic inspiration, in the “medal” of the society; patriotism, in the desire to keep united the States by this society of officers, and in the feeling of pride of victory. There is, too, a particular feeling of gratitude to the foreign officers who aided in this country, and these international friendships were cemented in the preliminaries to the formation of this society by the election of Baron von Steuben as temporary president of the Society; and by the presentation of the medal (designed by Major L’Enfant) to the following foreign officers:

“His Excellency the CHEVALIER DE LA LUZERNE, Minister Plenipotentiary.

“His Excellency the SIEUR GERARD, late Minister Plenipotentiary.

“Their Excellencies

The COUNT d’ESTAING,

The COUNT de GRASSE,

The COUNT de BARRAS,

The CHEVALIER des TOUCHES, Admirals and Commanders in the Navy,
"His Excellency the COUNT de ROCHAM-
BEAU, Commander-in-Chief,
And the Generals and Colonels in his army, and acquaint them, that the Society does itself the honor to consider them members."

This idealistic, philanthropic, and patriotic society chose as its first president, George Washington.

The Pennsylvania State Society of the Cincinnati met for the first time on the fourth day of October, 1783, at the City Tavern in Philadelphia. Here the officers for the first year were chosen:

Major General St. Clair, President.
Brigadier General Wayne, Vice-President.
Brigadier General Irvine, Treasurer.
Colonel Johnston, Assistant Treasurer.
Colonel Harmar, Secretary.

Famous Pennsylvania names are included in the lists of the members of this division of the Society; and out of the 291 members who formed the original Pennsylvania Society, 45 were from Carlisle, a large percentage considering the relative size of Carlisle and the cities of the State. Carlisle had, however, sent a famous personnel to the Revolutionary War, and these almost automatically must have become members of any such patriotic and military society, as that of the Cincinnati. There were, for instance, the "fighting Butlers" whose pugnacity became the subject of many tales of war and glory. One of these legends concerns General Butler at the battle of Yorktown; it seems that Washington himself had given Butler the right to choose the man who was to place the American Flag on the parapet; this duty was a mark of honor and General Butler, without prejudice we hope, chose a man not only from Pennsylvania but from Carlisle, his home town. This man was Lieutenant Ebenezer Denny (who was later to become the first mayor of Pittsburgh); and just as he was about to perform the honored and honorable deed, Baron von Steuben, who must have been somewhat excited, snatched the flag from the hand of Denny, and himself placed it upon the parapet. For this insult to his chosen officer, General Butler with his usual hotheadedness and belligerency.

sent his challenge to the Baron. And it is said that it required the good offices and gentle persuasion of George Washington and of Count Rochambeau to prevent a duel.

There were other distinguished Carlisle men who became members of the Society of the Cincinnati. Ebenezer Denny, spoken of above was one of them; Colonel Robert Magaw, the defender of Fort Washington, was another. General John Armstrong, a veteran of the Indian Wars, and his son, General John Armstrong, a hero of the Revolutionary War, were both members. Legends of the war fame of these men have become part of the epic history of Carlisle; tales of their almost incredible valor and fearlessness are part of the historical romance of the Valley. However, it should be remembered that these men were just as skilled in the arts of peace; some of them became our first legislators, some of them were distinguished surgeons, some of them were business men and interested in the educational facilities of the Valley to the extent of becoming trustees of Dickinson College and helping to give that College a firm financial foundation, and finally some became — good citizens. Truly they were following the example set by “that illustrious Roman, Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus.”

Letter from Mrs. Guiles Flower, Regent Cumberland County Chapter, D. A. R., 1927-1930 to Mrs. Parkinson. My dear Mrs. Parkinson:—

The committee for the erection of the markers in four of Cumberland County's old cemeteries was: Chairman, Mrs. Gilbert Swope, Newville; Mrs. T. J. Ferguson, Mechanicsburg; Mrs. Margaret Krall and Mrs. Dana Sutcliffe, Shippensburg; Mrs. Sarah Woods Parkinson, Miss Agnes Woods, Mrs. W. R. Shearer, Carlisle.

Mrs. Swope was a constant source of inspiration with her interest and love of the work and she took charge of the selection of the Big Spring churchyard site for the boulder. Miss Woods drove me to the North Mountains where with Mr. George Searight, Borough Manager, who gave much of his time, we selected the boulders upon which the markers were placed. Mrs. Shearer accompanied me to the meeting of the Property Committee of the Town Council of Carlisle who gave us the excellent site for the Old Graveyard marker. Mrs. Sutcliffe and Mrs. Krall are in charge of the selection and erection of the boulder for the old Shippensburg Graveyard marker, and Mrs. Ferguson aided in the erection of the Silver Spring additional marker.

At times the detail work connected with this pet project of my Regency seemed rather staggering but viewed from the kindly distance of a few months, it seems small when the value of the markers is appreciated. The verification of the 130 names on the markers and supplementary markers (made necessary by names being handed in after the completion of the original markers) took time and thought, but it was a labor of love.

We were fortunate to have the Highway Department haul the boulders from the mountains for us, to have Mr. Edward Black of Black and Black, Harrisburg, make us most attractive designs featuring our insignia in the lower corners, and to have the casting of the markers done in the Carlisle Foundry.

And now to you, Mrs. Parkinson, my thanks go out in greatest measure for your unstinted help in this work. Without your aid we should not have had the long list of names on the Old Graveyard marker for which you furnished about two-thirds.

Very cordially yours,
LENORE EMBICK FLOWER.

TO MOLLY PITCHER ON HER MONUMENT

By Sarah Woods Parkinson

O, Molly, standing in your bronze
Eyes looking far ahead,
You do not care what people think
Or of you what is said.

You know that some souls are so small.
A mustard seed in size
And 'tis the vision of the soul
That does control the eyes.

You know that noble deeds
Are neither bought nor sold
And ideals to the narrow mind
Their blossoms ne'er unfold.

You know that when your country called
Your answer quickly came
With never a thought of glory
Or never a thought of fame.

So, Molly, standing in your bronze
Eyes looking far ahead,
Your name will yet be living
When all of ours are dead.

July 4, 1927.

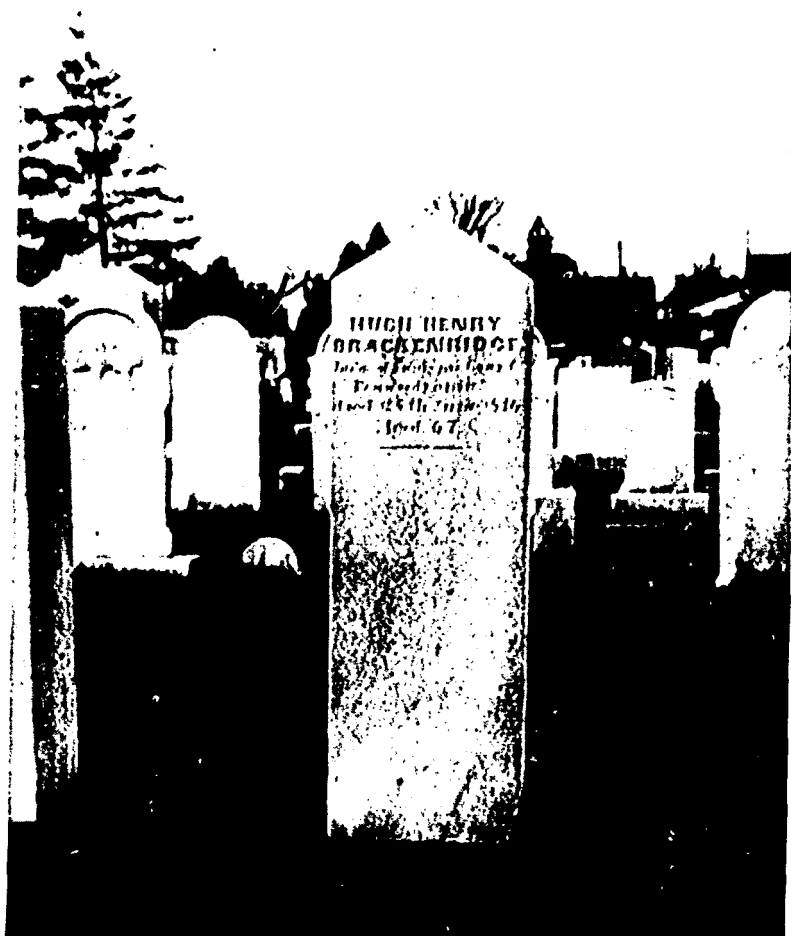

VERSES FROM HER MONUMENT

On Monmouth's Fields of carnage drear
With cooling drink and words of cheer,
A woman walked who knew no fear,
The wife of Hays, the gunner.
With ram-rod from her husband's hand
Beside his gun she takes her stand,
And helps to wrest our well loved land
From Britain's tyrant king.

From the ranks this woman came,
By the cannon earned her fame,
'Tis true she could not write her name
But Freedom's hand has carved it.
Shall we then criticize her ways?
Nay, rather give her well earned praise!
Our caps we doff, our voices raise
In cheers for Molly Pitcher.

Judge Hugh Henry Brackenridge, Chief Justice

EXTRACT FROM H. H. BRACKENBRIDGE

Judge Brackenbridge says he would rather be judged by his poetry than any of his "pen productions." These are the opening lines from "Answer to a Challenge."

"A challenge comes. A challenge! Mercy!
From one as hot as Hotspur Percy——
A challenge! What! To fight a duel!
I'd live ten years on water gruel,
Rather than stand up to be shot at,
Like a raccoon that can't be got at."

"THE GENIUS OF THE WOODS"

"I am the genius of the wood;
Whose care it is to crown the swelling rivers,
And bid the mountains hide them from the heat
Of the solstitial ray; the Delaware
I crown with poplar and with boughs of oak;
The Susquehanna with the cherry tree;
Potomac wasted by the summer's sun,
The Rappahannock and the river James,
I crown with branches of the lofty pine,
The great Ohio, with her thousand sons
To Mississippi flowing on, I crown
With leaves of ash-wood and the sugar tree.
This is the day and this the well known place,
Your presence is expected."

POEM ON CHARLES NISBET

by Isabell Oliver (Mrs. A. Sharp)

“Alas! another Luminary’s gone!
Whose rays of truth and science lightly shone,
Great Nisbet’s dead.
O Providence supply his vacant chair
O bless this Seminary, may it be
The nurse of morals and of piety
As well as science, may these all combine
Send forth its sons a blessing to mankind.”

THE CARLISLE LIBRARY COMPANY

The Carlisle Library Company met in the gallery of the old Court House. Its rules were printed in 1797. They and the catalog are well worthy of study. Its room was in the gallery of the old Court House and George Kline was appointed Librarian.

The Board of Managers were:

Dr. Charles Nisbet.*

Dr. John Armstrong.*

Dr. Davidson.*

Mr. Creigh.*

James Duncan.

CARPENTERS' SOCIETY OF CARLISLE

From the "Constitution of the Carpenters' Society of Carlisle," printed in April, 1795, which an authority on Labor Unions said a few years ago was the earliest Labor Union on record, we find the following:

"No member of this society shall be permitted to measure or value any work for any carpenter in Carlisle or Cumberland county, who is not a regular member of this society."

The members of the above Society were as follows:

*John Officer.

*Andrew Irvine.

Robert Irwin.

John Martin.

Charles Pattison.

William Thorn.

*Robert Barkely.

John Axer.

James Brown.

Robert Campbell.

William Buchanan.

Peter Bartholomew.

Teedrich Uhler.

George Spar.

Thomas Humphrey.

Andrew Metter.

Andrew Eyler.

Richard White.

John Warren.

“OLD WEST”

Three presidents of Dickinson College are buried in the “Old Graveyard”: Dr. Charles Nisbet, Dr. Robert Davidson and Dr. Herman M. Johnston. Also many of the famous men lying within the stone walls of the graveyard passed through this wide doorway of “Old West.”

But space will not permit even a partial list of men connected with Dickinson College. Dear to many of them would have been this tribute of General Horatio Collins King, class '58:

“Men may come and men may go,
Noble Dickinsonia;
Yet in deep and peaceful flow,
Noble Dickinsonia;
Shall thy stream of learning wide,
Through the ages grandly glide,
Ever to thy sons a pride,
Noble Dickinsonia.”

THE GIRLS OF '63

We all know Barbara Fritchie
Of quaint old Fredericktown,
Who waved from her attic window
The flag the men hauled down.

But few know Polly Meginnis,
Who saved Carlisle from shame
Of valor she was just as great,
Although of far less fame.

'Twas in the year of '63
When down Carlisle's wide streets
A man there ran who loudly called "And while you can, retreat."

Polly Meginnis heard the call,
Her door flung open wide,
And quickly going down the steps
She reached the runner's side.

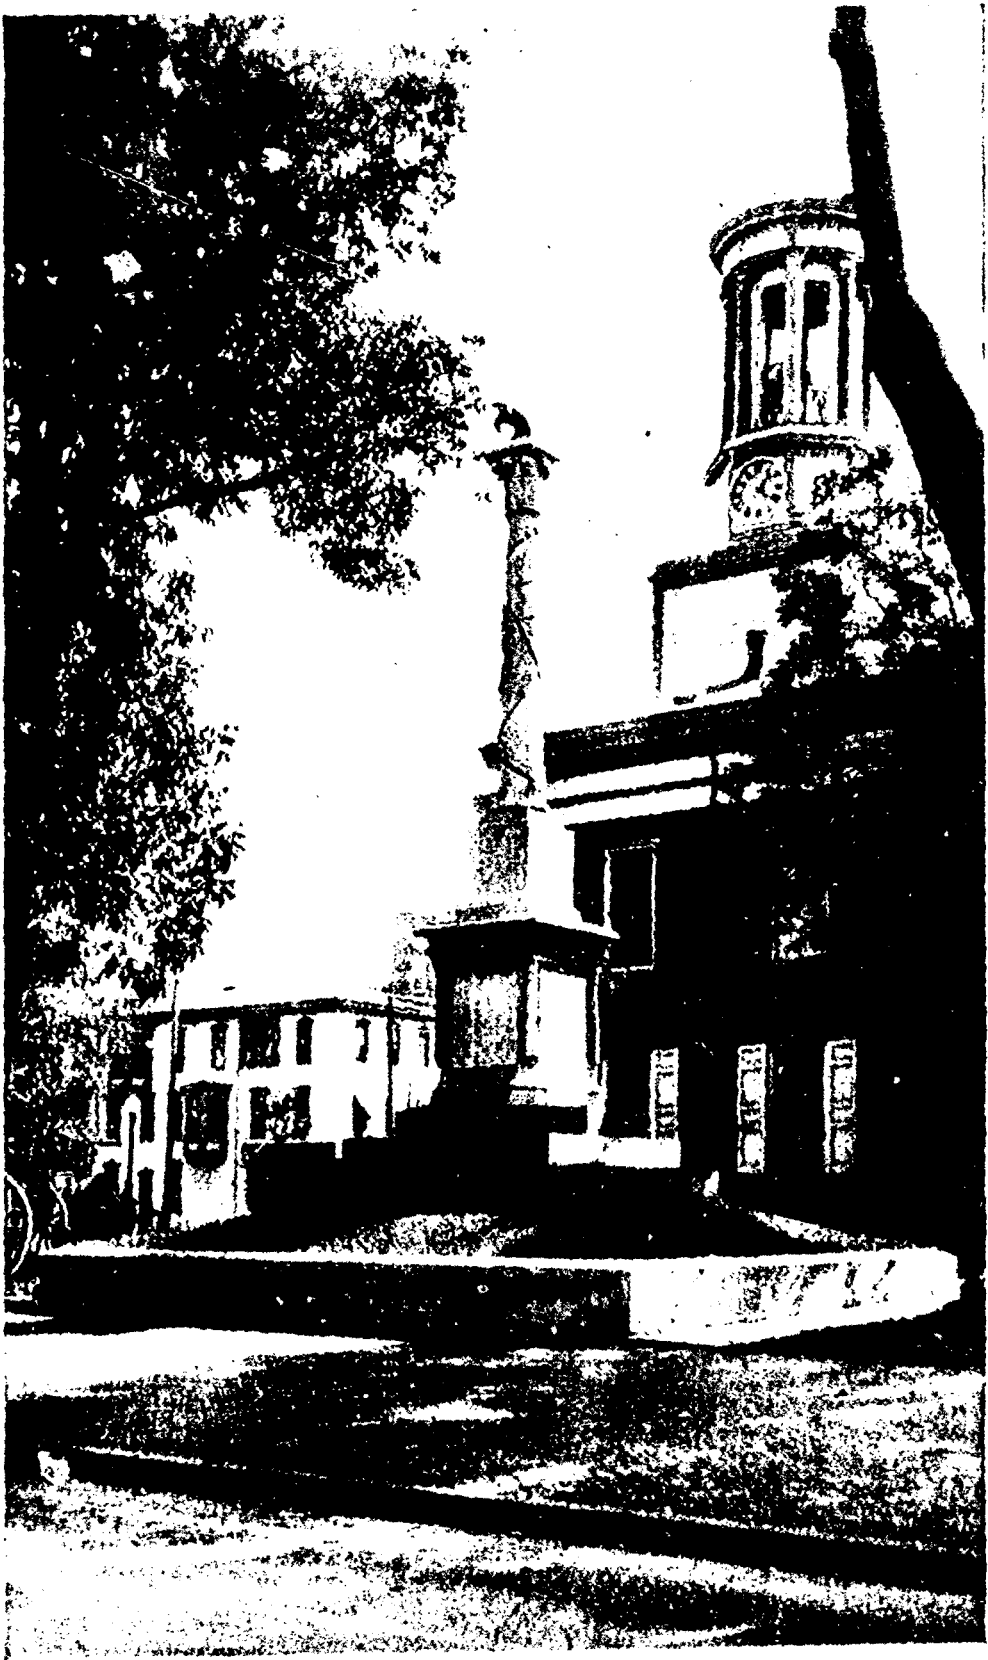

"You say 'Retreat'; I say 'Never.'
Carlisle shall hold her own.
You stare, yes, I repeat it,
E'en though I stand alone."

Re-entering her empty house
She stood in anxious thought
And her eye in passing,
Fell on the ancient coffee-pot.

She remembered how her uncle,
The Commodore of old,
Had always claimed its contents
Sent him forth brave and bold.

"My charm holds good as it did then,"
The old pot seemed to say,
And soon upon the kitchen stove
It sang in its old time way.

Then, from the corner cupboard
She brought her uncle's favorite cup,
And with her steaming coffee,
She filled it brimming up.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENT

Many of the men whose names are on this monument are buried in the Old Graveyard.

Within the great wide Winter's hall
Were men in various mood,
But Polly went straight to the group
Where General Smith then stood.

Should or should he not surrender?
Save Carlisle or see it burn?
Was he coward or a soldier?
Were the questions asked in turn.

Arguments for and against
From men of every kind;
And he thought now comes a woman
Who wants to free her mind.

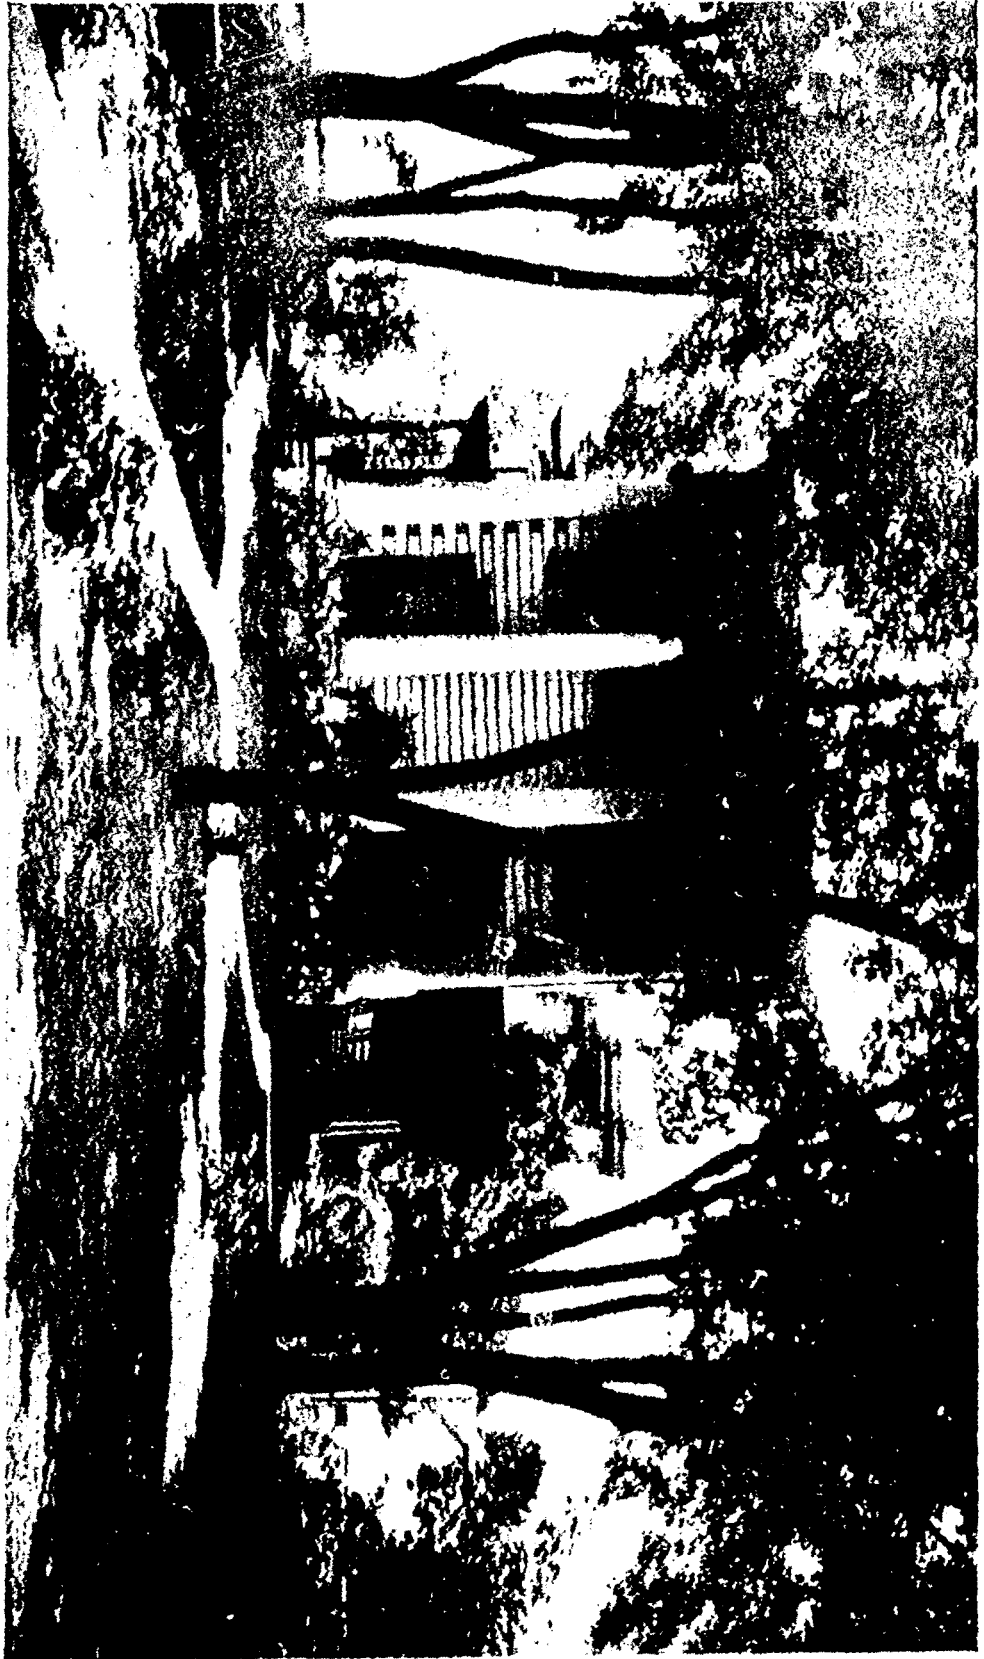

Polly Meginnis, straight and tall,
With bright and flashing eye,
As she spoke to the General
Her auburn head held high.

"This coffee's from a pot
That pours strength and courage, too,
And these I sadly fear
Are needed now by you.

"Man, never surrender
And never let Carlisle that stood
Throughout the Revolution stand afraid
Before this poltroon brood."

He drank the coffee at a gulp,
The empty cup threw down,
And with an oath he loudly cried,
"You're right, we'll hold the town."

Now here's to these two damsels,
Who were of fear so free
So fill your cup and drink it down
To these girls of '63.

HOUSE OF DR. STOCK

Residence of the late Jacob Stock, who wrote the following poems.

AUTUMN ARBOR DAY

Dedicated to Rev. E. E. Higbee, D. D.

by Jacob Stock
(1836 - 1908)

Hark! ye teachers in your station
Who will go, the call obey;
Who will heed the proclamation
And observe the Arbor Day?
Who will go and plant a cedar
With the children bright and gay;
Who will go and be their leader
On the Autumn Arbor Day?

If you cannot plant a cedar Close beside the school-yard gate,
You can be a faithful teacher
In the grand old Keystone State.
You can teach the little children
Once a year this tribute pay,
You can lend a hand to help them
Plant a tree on Arbor Day.

If you cannot find a poplar
That will grow up straight and tall,
You can go and plant a maple,
Plant it near the school house wall;
And it may be that the children
In the years to come will play
With its autumn leaves all golden
Each returning Arbor Day.

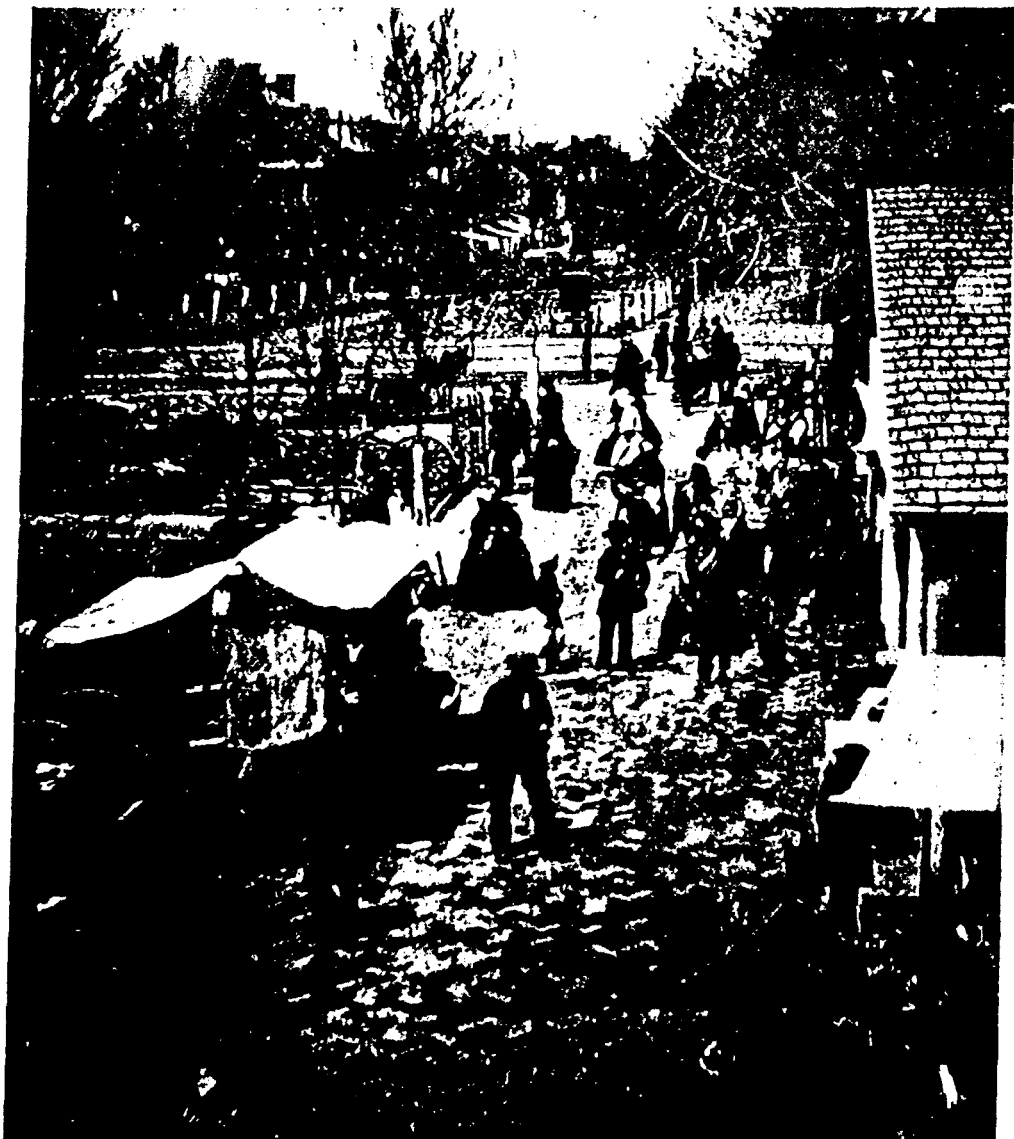

If you cannot on the play-ground
Find a spot to rear a pine,
You may plant a shrub or lilac
Or perchance a creeping vine.
Who can tell but that your labor
With the dark and yellow clay
May induce a passing neighbor
To observe the Arbor Day.

If you are a school director
And you have the cause at heart,
With the teachers and the scholars
You can take an active part.

If you have a little leisure
You can join the happy throng,
You can hear the little children
Chant their Autumn Arbor song.

If you are an earnest patron,
Then the schools a visit pay;
It may pay you in good measure
Planting trees on Arbor Day.
For the cause of education
You can all unite and pray
That the people of our Nation
May observe an Arbor Day.

CARLISLE SQUARE

Many of those seen in this picture doubtless attended the Carlisle High School and were buried in the Old Graveyard. The lad in the center is the late A. Allen Line, and the man seated, with a high hat and white gloves, is Mr. Harkness.

THE FIFTIETH COMMENCEMENT OF THE CARLISLE HIGH SCHOOL

By Jacob Stock
(1836 - 1908)

Birthday of our "Free School System," Birthday of the joys that flow
From the tree our fathers planted,
 Planted fifty years ago.

Like a tree where rippling waters
 Murmur on with gentle flow,
There our Carlisle schools were planted,
 Planted fifty years ago.

Soon they budded, bloomed and blossomed;
 God beheld and bade them grow,
Nurtured by her faithful children
 Planted fifty years ago.

May the alumni all to-day,
 Honor to this tree bestow
For the fruit already gathered
 Planted fifty years ago.

Hark, the children thank the founders
 For the streams of joy that flow
From the tree their fathers planted,
 Planted fifty years ago.

As we recall these blessings o'er
 May our hearts with joy o'erflow
For the tree of knowledge planted,
 Planted fifty years ago.

ON THE CONODOGUINET

by Bennet Bellman

When the birds are in the bushes and the sun is in the sky,
Where the golden song of thrush is, when the fleecy clouds are high,
In the balmy air of Springtime, when the blossoms bloom in May,
I take my boat and row and float far from the world away.

Between blue distant mountains are fair Cumberland's green hills,
With sunshine on her fields afar, and ripples on her rills.
With the blossoms on her branches all ablooming in the May,
In a world that hath no sorrow in the sunshine of today.

Here old Conodoguinnet widens with reflections of its trees,
That show within its crystal depth unruffled by the breeze,
In its bosom holding fondly there a glimpse of azure sky,
Which doth bend, a dome above me, but below me too doth lie.

With nature healthful, pure and sweet, now in her smiling mood,
I fain would lay me at her feet, into her courts intrude.
Learn the deep wisdom here that dwells amid her silent hills
In song of bird in leafy dells, in ripple of her rills.

By sylvan copse, where woodland stops, we float as in a dream,
'Neath shadows green the trees between, doth flow
the winding stream,
With barbarous Indian name of old, but which is ever fair
When through the fields of Cumberland it flows with sunny air.

Taken from Cave Hill at the time this poem was written.

By banks of moss its waves do toss, by velvet violets;
In shady dells we bid farewells to all our vain regrets;
Let great god Pan come if he can without yon silent wood.

We'll join his merry crew and live in leafy solitude.

On yonder looming limestone bluff, o'er which the sky doth shine,

I see the oak and elm trees, I see the darker pine, Whose sweet balsamic odor is now wafted on the breeze

Sweeter than perfumed air that blows among Arabian trees.

Within a sylvan scene like this, what soul could e'er repine?

To drink the sunlight here is bliss like old Olympian wine,

For in the sun and wood and stream I feel the throbbing heart

Of the great Mother who doth hold us all of her a part.

Her "small still voice" one moment fills the vasty vague immense,

One moment with her pulse I thrill through every wakened sense,

She kindly looks upon me, so! — my heart hath once beguiled,

And though she turn and leave me, Lo! I know she once hath smiled.

So, floating on the stream to-day I have this lesson learned —

Like to a wandering prodigal to her I have returned,
And fain would leave men fight for fame, or learning of the books

If I may stay with Nature here beside her running brooks.

This Ends the Book of Memory.

WHAT IS MEMORY?

Memory with her faithful brush
Paints on time's well worn page,
Pictures of valor and of worth,
To keep from age to age.

Memory with harp of gold,
Sings ballads old not new;
Of noble men and women fair
Who to their trusts were true.

Memory with loom so fine
Weaves tapestries so clear,
That home scenes from the long ago,
Are brought today quite near.

Memory with generous hand
These priceless gifts does give;
That through the countless centuries
The dead shall always live.

"A Little Child Shall Lead Them."
