PREFACE

In this case the title is sufficient explanation of the text. The originals are at the county seat, Tappahannock, Virginia. Record Book No. 11 is well preserved. No. 12 is in such bad condition that it had to be withdrawn from use. While the handwriting is clear the paper has become so dry and brittle that oftentimes upon turning a page it would fall in fragments. I gathered these up and put them in envelopes for the future entertainment of a restorer. They will be matched together after the manner of a jig-saw puzzle.

While the notes were taken in Virginia, this volume 29 is being made in California. My wife and I came here for two months but remained seven months as guests of her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Davenport, formerly of Richmond but now of Hollywood and Pacific Palisades. When I became nervous from having too much fun in this gay country, they not only agreed to let me work, but provided and furnished two comfortable offices for that. There was nothing for me to do but get busy. If, therefore the data in this volume is of value, the Davenports are to be thanked, not me.

It has been of interest to find, in modern Southern California, many old Rappahannock Valley names. On the signs of business houses, doctors' offices and so on. Combinations of surnames that certainly originated there. Doubtless the owners don't know this, much less care, but I became aware that about three fourths of the index to this Essex volume might be found in the Los Angeles telephone directory of this date.

Notes on the Sargeant Inventory.

An ell in England, 47 inches.

Ranorins. Am unable to identify. The nearest we can come to it being Renforcee which was a strong make of silk.

Kenting. A kind of fine linen cloth. "Lawns, gauzes and linens called Kentings are exported to Ireland". 1793. Oxford Dictionary.

Ferretting. "Waistcoats . . . edged and trimmed with black ribbands or ferretting". 1754. "A . . . straw hat, with a piece of black coarse ferretting dangling from it". 1845. Oxford Dictionary.

Fall. An article of dress. A band or collar worn falling flat round the neck, in fashion during the seventeenth century. Oxford Dictionary.

Shag. A cloth having a velvet nap on one side, usually of worsted, but sometimes of silk. Sir R. Boyle in Lismore Papers, II. 86. ". . . gave him ordre to bring for me . . . crymson shagg and Spangled Lace for winter Clothes for my Children". 1623. Oxford Dictionary.

Ozanbrig. A coarse, heavy cotton material, quite like canvas, used for clothing negro slaves. A number of Colonial Record Books were covered with it to protect the sheepskin bindings. This cloth is so tough that it has actually lasted to this date in many an old Court House.

Bengal. Applied to piece goods ( apparently of different kinds ) exported from Bengal to England in the seventeenth century.
 "Their Persian Silks, Bengalls, Printed and Painted Callicoes . . . are used for Beds, Hanging of Rooms". 1680.
 "There is two sorts, strip'd and plain, by the Buyers called Bengalls . . . they are very fine stripes, but are of no great use or service". 1696
 Luttrell's Brief Rel. IV. 147., states that a bill is to be brought to forbid wearing silks imported from Persia and East India, with bengalls, callicoes, etc.
 Striped gingham, etc. from Bengal.

From Oxford Dictionary.

Linsey-woolsey. A shoddy material made of cotton and wool. Still woven, as a home-made cloth, in Virginia. Generally considered very cheap.
 The story goes that an old lady up in Hanover County had 12 or 15 women slaves who made this cloth. That thereby she accumulated a comfortable fortune and finally bought herself a coach. That she had painted upon the door a spinning wheel and by way of a motto the statement that linsey-woolsey paid for it. This indication of the hard work that went on at her plantation she considered more honorable than a display of her armorial bearings.

B.F.

"1 pair ordinary Booles". Unable to identify. Possibly bowls ?

No. 12. page 46. The following entry is an important one so far as these records go. It is hoped that the abstract is fairly clear since the original is very involved.

Deed. 10 Sept 1704. John Battaile of St Marys parish, Essex Co., sells Charles Smith a tract of land.

Whereas John Battaile purchased of Robert Taliaferro and Sarah his wife 300 acres on 30th March 1687, and also purchased from Francis Taliaferro and Elizabeth his wife 300 acres on 5th Sept 1687, both parcels of land equalling 600 acres. And since having obtained a patent for the said 600 acres as lapsing from Thomas Button as marrying the relict of John Gillett, and by deed of assignment on the back of the patent, made over to Charles Smith ( for L 250. Sterling pd by Smith to Battaile ) the 600 acres, less 125 acres formerly sold by Battaile to Robert Thomas. Also reserving a plot 20 ft square "where the graves now are for a Burying place for me and my family". The property lying in St. Marys parish, Essex Co.
