*Out of limitless time and space we come
To spend a tiny moment
On this speck we call the Earth,
And in that fleeting, mortal life we strive
For better or for worse.
Then, leaving seeded fields and a monument or two,
We take another unfamiliar path in confidence
That as there is no end to space or time,
There is no ending to the Love
Which waves a fond farewell
And holds our hand to guide us once again
To the unknown from the known.*

THE CRANBROOK BOOTH FAMILY of America was founded by Henry Gough Booth and Harriot Wood (Booth) when they were married in the parish church of East Grinstead, Sussex, England, on Friday, March 18, 1836, and “The bells rang very prettily” according to a letter from the bride.

The bridegroom being a Close-Communion Baptist (although brought up as a Unitarian) and his wife being a member of the Free Church of England even though her family attended St. Dunstan’s Church, apparently shied away from a wedding in their home town of Cranbrook, Kent, and journeyed a few miles to a place where, without stirring up criticism from their even less “orthodox” friends, the Prayer Book rite of marriage was performed.

They returned to Cranbrook immediately and took up residence on the hill on Kent Road, not far from the town’s great windmill. Here their first child, Henry Wood Booth was born. Soon afterward they moved in town to a house on High Street near what was known as “The Studios.” It was here George, their second son, and their only daughter Anne Booth (Langley) were born, and Harriot died a year and four months after the birth of the latter.

Thus the co-founder of the family had no inkling that her descendants would leave the picturesque village where her father, Thomas Wood (familiarily known as “Old Master Wood”) was the town brewer and her father-in-law and husband were coppersmiths working in the shop still operating as “Hutchinson Roe” under the great copper kettle sign which hangs over the narrow sidewalk of High Street. She alone lies buried in Cranbrook’s churchyard, her gravestone standing opposite the west door of St. Dunstan’s.

Her children and numerous descendants, both living and dead, have found their place in North America as her beloved husband did after taking Harriet Harman (no issue) as his second wife. They sailed from St. Catherine’s Docks in London on May 7, 1844 with Henry, George and Anne, preparing themselves for hardships ahead by traveling steerage and cooking the food on deck which they had brought with them. Well over a month later they landed in New York where they were swindled over railroad tickets as they had been swindled in London through the purchase of worthless provisions for the sea voyage. It was a hard beginning to their lives in the New World—lives lived in Pittsburg, Cincinnati, Buffalo, St. Catharines, Toronto, St. Thomas and Detroit; lives which lived up to the name of Booth.

What's in a name anyway? Booth in any form (whether Latin, French, English, or Dutch) means nothing more than "temporary dwelling." It suggests restlessness more than security; even that the sheriff may be in hot pursuit!

The custom of carrying on a family name is a relatively ancient fact which probably has some unfathomable merit. The women, however, while changing their names in marriage, help carry the blood-stream on and are consequently of far more importance than admitted by the College of Heralds. They are integral parts of the family tree.

While the Founders set the Cranbrook Booth Family of America in motion (the pioneering spirit of Harriet Harman (Booth) nursing it along) their blood is a small part of what is found giving life and vitality (and we hope added mentality) to the fourth and fifth generations. Each of today's crop of their descendants has thirty other great-great-great grandparents who passed on physical, mental and spiritual qualities which they had acquired from well over two million ancestors of twenty-one generations and some four hundred years before. Boast not of your blue blood; it may lack red corpuscles!

Never-the-less we have a passing interest in our Booth forebears which somehow outweighs interest in others. We know relatively little about the Cranbrook Booths but assume they were descended from those of the name who possessed the "lordship of Boothes" in Lancashire, one of the three original palatines of England.

Old volumes in Cranbrook Church record the marriage there of William Booth (cantor of the parish choir) and Elizabeth Goldsmith on June 12, 1739 and that they had five children, a son Thomas (b. Cranbrook, August 23, 1749) being the fourth.

Further records unearthed by Ralph Harman Booth and Henry Wood Booth follow. Thomas Booth married Elizabeth Kingswood (b. Cranbrook, August 23, 1749) in St. Dunstan's Church July 9, 1776; he being killed in action while serving in Admiral Rodney's Fleet in the West Indies when their only son George was five years of age. She received a sizeable pension because of his death.

George Booth (b. Cranbrook, March 24, 1777; d. London, February 12, 1845) learned and worked at coppersmithing with Mr. Paulson in Cranbrook. He first married Susan Smallfield (no issue) and then after her death, married in August 1803 Elizabeth Dan Gough who was the daughter of a preacher named George Gough. She bore him eleven children, all but the first being born in Cranbrook. Henry Gough Booth, co-founder of the family, their fifth child and fourth son, was born September 26, 1811.

Apparently neither he nor his father, nor any of their relatives, laid claim to the large unclaimed estate of a Sir Charles Booth who died April 26, 1795 and was buried six miles north of Cranbrook. No doubt our family tree would have required more than a little surgery to prove a claim. The event, however, taking place before the invention of death duties and estate taxes, would have provided enough to eliminate the hardships of the early American years—that is, if some sharper did not cut the bottom out of the recipient's pocket! Incidentally, there is only one Charles Booth among the 150 or so descendants in the two Booth branches of the family recorded in this booklet.

If a fortune had been in hand, Henry Gough Booth would probably not have developed the restless spirit which kept him looking for something better throughout his life. Even if he had, the whole course of history would have been changed. His elder son Henry would never have started the first branch of the American family by marrying a French-Canadian Protestant by the name of Clara Gagnier; George, his younger son, would never have wed an American girl—Myrtilla Smith—to start the second branch, and Anne would have married someone other than a Toronto architect by the name of Henry Langley. So What? We are.

Each of us is unique because of the merging streams of history—because there were differences of opinion in religion, hard times, wars, riots, fires and fevers; because of the twinkle in an eye, failures and successes; stout or timid hearts, feeble or vivid imaginations, physical and spiritual passions. Our forebears made history; history made us fruit on our family tree. Some of the fruit is good to look at, some sweet, some tasteless, some all too sour; some is nourishing and of great value to others, some sounder than a Roosevelt dollar, some full of the seeds of new ideas. But in all this harvest it is doubtful there is a single worm which can't be turned to some good account.

As each new blood stream is blended with another, as each of us faces the events of this present, let us do credit to the Booth blood even though it is a mere drop in a well-filled bucket. "Quod Ero Spero"—if, as the Booth motto says, you resolve to be what you hope to be, be sure your hopes are high!

The Booth name carries on. The Cranbrook name carries on also. In addition to the Kentish village from which the family emigrated there are at least two towns and an educational community bearing the name—a small village in British Columbia, Canada; a city in Australia and a group of six institutions in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, U. S. A. One of these is one of the world's three boys' schools called Cranbrook School, the others being in the Kentish Cranbrook and in Australia. Another is Kingswood School Cranbrook (girls) named for Henry Gough Booth's paternal grandmother and which has her tea caddy as a cherished possession. Still a third institution is Christ Church Cranbrook with its stone-vaulted St. Dunstan's Chapel. Here a stone from the good saint's Glastonbury Abbey is set in the Chapel wall and a carved stone from St. Dunstan's Church in Cranbrook, Kent, stands near the entrance door as the grave stone of Harriot Wood (Booth) stands close by the door of that ancient church.

It is hoped the information contained here-in will prove correct and of some interest even if of no great value in depicting anyone's total background. Its chief lack is in the realm of the spirit—the motives, efforts, tragedies and triumphs which fill each life between the dates marking the beginning and the end. If readers will provide detailed information on such things as the education, philosophy, religion, business, hobbies and family life of themselves and those of whom they have knowledge, a revised edition may be humanized far beyond what has been possible with my limited time and knowledge. It should be borne in mind that a few family skeletons might turn this into a best seller and give further proof that the Booths are generally Protestants—protesting almost anything which does not fit in with their personal convictions!

Address all communications relative to "The Cranbrook Booth Family of America" to the compiler and accept his thanks for cooperation rendered and apologies for "blanks" in the published information.

BOOTH ARMS

Undoubtedly the arms of Henry Gough Booth's ancestors.

Coat of arms is blazoned: Silver; three boars' heads, erect and erased, black. Crest: a lion passant, silver. Motto: Quad Ero Spero or What I hope to accomplish I shall accomplish.

Founder's Symbol is blazoned: Sky blue; bee in upper left quarter and in lower portion straight path leading upward, gold. Crest: Baptismal shell, gold. Motto: Look to the Bees and Follow.

FOUNDER'S SYMBOL

Arbitrarily assigned to Henry Gough Booth, Founder

While we may be either too wild for our own good or insufferable "boars," a boar's head is as out-of-date a symbol for a tribe which no longer hunts wild beasts as the lion in the crest giving a Roman salute! Consequently the author (not even a freshman in the College of Heraldry) created a device suggestive of the Baptist Founder's life. The bee seeks out the beautiful, receives the sweet and nourishing, and works energetically to produce enough to share with others. The hill-like form is a good symbol of determination, the shell one of The Living Water of which Henry Gough Booth was so sure he had tasted. It and the bee symbols have been used in the first branch of the family since about 1890, Henry Wood Booth using two bees, George Gough Booth using three with a chevron replacing the pyramid and Henry Scripps Booth sporting the three bee and chevron arrangement on the left half of the shield and on the right, a thistle stalk with blossom and leaves of blue on a gold field.

EXPLANATION

The names of the Founders and their descendants are indicated in black type, both in the text and on the family tree. The surname acquired by a woman in marriage is added to her maiden name and enclosed in parentheses.

All Booth descendants have been systematically assigned numbers which identify their positions in the family. The meanings of numerical digits follow.

First Digit: the number of the individual's generation from and including the Founders. Number One being assigned to Henry Gough Booth and Harriot Wood (Booth).

Second Digit: the letters A, B, and C represent the Founders' three children and the first, second and third branches of the family they started.

Third Digit: the number of a child in a family group of the Third Generation.

Fourth Digit: the number of a child in a family group of the Fourth Generation.

Fifth Digit: the number of a child in a family group of the Fifth Generation.

Each of the three branches of the family (A, B, or C) is individually treated as a group in a section devoted to it. Within each section the records of all individuals in one generation are presented before those on the succeeding generation are introduced. Children of the same parents are treated chronologically as to date of birth. Likewise in the next generation the children of the first child are treated as a group, then the children of the second child as a group, and so on.

Information on Individuals is located as follows in order to avoid unnecessary duplication.

Unmarried child and Married child having no issue	{ Information follows his or her listing as a child.
Married child having issue:	{ Information is omitted from listing as a child but accompanies the individual name as the head of a newer family unit.
Second Mate of a Descendant:	{ Information is included with that of a family unit, or if there is none, it accompanies listing as a child.

Blank pages are provided for the recording of information about parents-in-law and grandparents other than those listed in this book.

EMIGRATED:

From England, May 7, 1844, on sailing vessel "Hendrick Hudson" with second wife and three children.

Henry Gough Booth was a coppersmith. He learned his trade in Fletcher's shop in Cranbrook. Among many other places, he worked at "Kepps" in London making fancy pudding moulds and helping construct the great copper ball on the dome of St. Paul's; in Buffalo for "Stephen Dudley and Sons" making coffee urns and other kitchen equipment for the new lake steamers, and as senior partner with his teen-age boys in "Booth and Sons"—manufacturers of forges and washing machines, coppersmiths, plumbers, etc., etc. as well as storekeepers. Fire in 1862 made this, his most successful enterprise, an almost complete loss but the boys pulled it through while he went to England with Anne. It has enjoyed a century of progress under varying names: Booth and Son, Booth and Booth, Booth Copper Co., Booth Coulter Copper and Brass Co., and Coulter Copper and Brass Co., Ltd. Writing vividly of his father, Henry Wood Booth said many years later: "The fact is he was never a business man and did not understand business at all. He was a mechanic, a first class mechanic, an artist in his line—and out of it. . . .—all the money he had ever made was made by his own handicraft. He had never made much out of other men's labor. He despised all kinds of common work in his line.

"He was a man with only two objects in life. One object centered at his work and the other at his religion. . . . Cranbrook in England, outside of the parish church, was dominated for some two hundred years by different sects of Baptists. Father, before his marriage, fell under the influence of a party of these who were very High Calvinists and all his lifetime he was governed by the same uncompromising tenets. He fully believed that Christ died for the Elect only. . . . The people alluded to, my father included, firmly believed themselves to be of these Elect, who, although they might fall, could not be utterly cast down.

"Two things he never scrupled to spend money for. These were good books and good tools. . . .

"My father's great drawback, and the thing which caused him more trouble than anything else . . . was his habitual use of stimulants. . . . He would, however, often try to give up whiskey and confine himself to beer. The result was irritability of temper, restlessness, a desire for change, causing him to move about. The loss of his first wife, my mother, in his early manhood filled him with a kind of chronic discontent. His second marriage was a marriage of convenience—he wanted a mother for his children. But a woman eight years older than himself was no proper mate for a man of his disposition. He treated her well never-the-less . . . and she was perfectly devoted to him."

The eldest child's memory of the co-founder of the family, his mother, was limited to her looking into his cradle, her weeding between the stones of the path to the street, and her funeral which he attended while George and Anne remained at home. He recalled the procession from the house when he, his father and friends followed the pall-covered coffin as it was carried on the shoulders of four men to the lich gate of the churchyard, met by the parish priest in surplice and stole, and conducted to her grave for the Burial of the Dead. Friends gathered afterward for a little wine in their High Street house. He wrote in his autobiography of Harriot Wood (Booth): "My father assured me, many a time, that my mother was a most devout, pious, loving, lovable and beautiful young woman; constant in prayer and ever solicitous for the welfare of others."

There is no picture of her. However, a fine oval portrait of Henry Gough Booth by an unknown artist hangs in the Dining Room of Cranbrook House. A copper kettle, purchased as a wedding gift from the shop in Cranbrook when he worked there in 1809, was acquired from the bride by Henry Wood Booth and is now to be found in Cranbrook House. A brass coal scuttle which the Founder made is in the possession of George Coleman Booth.

Henry Wood Booth, founder of the First Branch of the family, sailed from England May 7, 1844. He received the greater part of his school education in Buffalo, New York. He tried his hand at many things—succeeding, failing and succeeding again many times due to misfortune, his own character and the pressing demands of his growing family. At twenty he was active in temperance work, published the first of his several news and temperance papers, and worked for winegrowers in the state of New York who adopted his suggestion of distilling cheap brandy from natural wine furnished with extra sugar. He had an internal conflict between temperance and the distillery business from which his livelihood chiefly came. He was agent for a fire extinguisher and went about Canada building fires and putting them out. He bought the Canadian Advertising Agency; acted as business manager of a successful production of the opera "Martha;" made a coffee substitute from beans in the family kitchen, inventing necessary equipment and developing the idea into the prosperous Kaoka business which he finally lost.

He acted as Entry Clerk in the "Barnum Wire and Iron Works" of Detroit and soon was commissioned to establish a branch in Windsor. Referring to his boss: "He never found fault with me for not doing." Next was Booth & Sons founded 1854 (Henry Gough Booth and his two sons), manufacturers and storekeepers, (which was practically put out of business by fire in 1862) and then tried his hand at his International Manufacturers and Inventors Agency. In his Autobiography he wrote his conclusion of that episode and his personal inventing experience: "My advice to anyone thinking of making an invention or getting a patent is—don't."

He returned to writing, producing a Detroit Column: Information for the People and then became manager of the Scripps League's quarterly—Current History. When his sons George and Ralph acquired with two Chicago dailies a weekly called the Chicago Commercial Journal, he acted as Editor and Manager until they discontinued it because of their wishing to concentrate in the daily field. He then became an official critic of the papers they were managing; and sometime later wrote for the Detroit News religious page—Peregrinations of a Church Tramp. Out of this experience came his unsuccessful attempt to revive the practice of family prayer through the "Bell, Book and Candle Society." (Not liking Popish symbols—"A strict Baptist cousin in England wrote—"It reminds me of an Irish wake.") He became an American citizen Sept. 11, 1911. His last twenty years were spent at Cranbrook, Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, building rock gardens and paths with the same imagination he had shown in embellishing every place the family ever lived; studying, writing and arguing with the vigor of youth; and living happily with the wife who had stood by him through thick and thin.

Clara, daughter of Charles Gagnier (b: July 7, 1812, Detroit, Michigan; d: Sept. 8, 1843; b:) and Maria Martel (Gagnier) (b: July 22, 1815, d: Dec. 7, 1876, b: Toronto) was, according to rumor, originally not welcomed by the Booths—(probably because of her French and non-Baptist background)—but added to a frequently bleak, difficult existence a distinctive charm. Dressed in lavender and old lace in her latter years, she was the center of attraction at parties although she suffered from rheumatism.

His "Life," written in his own expressive hand, is to be found in the Library of Cranbrook House. In other rooms are a bust by Mario Korbel and a fiery, full length portrait by Osip Perelma, both done from life. A posthumous portrait by Harold Brett also hangs there. His earliest portrait, painted in 1908, hangs at Thornlea House and is by Robert J. Wickenden. Unfortunately, no portrait was painted of his beautiful wife.

"G. G." as his newspaper associates called him, received an eighth grade education in Canada but was given an Honorary M.A. degree by the University of Michigan; became a U. S. citizen April 21, 1882; worked for the Canadian branch of the Barnum Wire and Iron Works as salesman-designer; then bought the business with a partner. At 20, sold business to become manager of the Detroit Evening News owned by his father-in-law, which as successively manager and president he built into a great metropolitan daily. Purchased the Grand Rapids Press and other papers; combined some with others belonging to his brother Ralph to form what is now known as Booth Newspapers, Inc. and became its President. He and his wife were art patrons and co-founders of Brookside School Cranbrook (young children), Christ Church Cranbrook (Episcopal), Cranbrook School (boys), Kingswood School Cranbrook (girls), Cranbrook Institute of Science (education and research in the natural sciences), and Cranbrook Academy of Art (an institution of higher learning with degree granting privilege and museum filled primarily with their art collection); also established The Cranbrook Foundation to which their home, Cranbrook House, was given. "Nellie" was the daughter of James Edmund Scripps (b: March 19, 1835, London, England; d: May 29, 1906, Detroit, Mich.) and Harriet Josephine Messenger (Scripps) (b: Dec. 31, 1838, Peru, Vermont; d: March 6, 1933, Detroit Mich.). Edmund, known as "E. W.", by his newspaper colleagues, apparently was educated in St. Catharines, Ont. He went to Detroit in 1881, his first job being a Western Union messenger boy, who, by asking everyone to whom he delivered a telegram if they wanted an office boy, went to work for the law firm of Carpenter and McLaughlin. He served as bank clerk in the National Bank and took his turn as night watchman sleeping with a gun beside him in a little attic overlooking the banking room. Later his urge for a dedicated life led him into Y. M. C. A. work where he served some seven years in Albany, N. Y. and about seven more as Asst. General Sec. in New York City, successfully managing a campaign for building funds in 1903. A move back to Mich. took place in 1906 where he continued his practical idealism as Managing Editor of the Grand Rapids Press just acquired by his brother George. While the cause was probably unknown, it is probable civic and social problems and conflicts were the cause of the many digestive disorders which led to operations. Mollie, was the daughter of Oscar J. Smith and Esther Jane Myler (Smith) of Redford, Mich., now a part of Detroit. With a smiling personality, it was not surprising to find her soon after a couple of operations in her mid-eighties, with a martini in hand at a Press luncheon, having a wonderful time. Both were members of the Presbyterian Church.

HOME: Mollie lives at 230 Fountain St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

Ralph, known as "R. H." to his newspaper colleagues, completed his formal education at Cass Technical High, Detroit, in the 9th grade; at the age of 15 was a teller at Detroit National Bank, taking his turn as night watchman with a gun beside his bed in the attic over-looking the banking room; was Cashier 1892 and Business Manager 1895 Detroit Tribune (now part of Detroit News); Editor 1903 Chicago Journal; purchased and sold Grand Rapids Herald; acquired other Michigan papers which were combined with some belonging to brother George to form what is known as Booth Newspapers, Inc. of which he was president 1914-1930 when he resigned to become Minister to Denmark. He was president of Detroit's Arts Commission many years. In 1900 he fell while climbing Mt. Tacoma and was reported killed but received only minor injuries. Mary (earlier known as Myrtle, a name Ralph did not like), daughter of John Henry Batterman and Mary Schuster (Batterman) of Chicago, erected a transept window in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, to Ralph's memory and was a patron of the National Gallery, Washington, D. C. Both were art collectors and benefactors of the Detroit Institute of Arts.

ETHEL MAUD BOOTH (MASON) (3B4)

b: Aug. 24, 1878, Toronto, Ont.; married, without issue.

George Booth, founder of the Second Branch of the family sailed from England May 7, 1844, and settled with his parents in Buffalo. He received most of his schooling there, completing it in England. He participated with his father and brother in 1854 in founding Booth and Sons (coppersmiths, founders) which celebrated its centennial under the name of Coulter Copper and Brass Co., Ltd. When his brother Henry retired in 1860 the name became Booth and Son, this name remaining well after 1870 when Henry Gough Booth died and it became Booth and Booth, Booth Copper Company (1892-1910) and with amalgamation, acquired the centennial name. George Booth was president until his death.

He was a founder of the Industrial Fair Association which established the Canadian National Exposition in 1879; was instrumental in the development of its Manufacturers' Section; served as section chairman for years and was a director of the Exposition Board until his death.

George Booth invented and patented the Steel Clad Bath in 1891 and formed the Steel Clad Bath and Metal Company in 1893; he was president of Engravers Metal Company, Ltd. and served the Canadian Manufacturers Association as Treasurer for thirty-five years.

While life was not always easy, George, with only four children, was not forced in the early days to take such hasty action to provide necessities as was his more excitable brother, but effectively concentrated his efforts in one general direction. Myrtle, as he called his wife, was the daughter of William Smith of West Liberty, Ohio. No record of the mother's name has been found. George and Myrtilla were Baptists.

*As Dopy the Dopster took dope when he could (Whether 'twas bad or whether 'twas good)
Got up to his ears, lapped it up like a pup
He's sick and tired and very fed up!*

*A couple of shots will make you a dope—
Fill you with awe, removing all hope,
And raise up such questions as when's red blood blue
Or why in blazes he got in "Who's Who?"*

*Do Mamby and Pamby fill you with shame?
(They'll be forgotten—even their name!)
Or blots on escutcheons? (Time makes them bright!)
Worried about skeletons? (Turn on the light!)*

*'Though cave men for forbears did ne'er give a hoot
Goldilock's three bears were awfully cute
So who gives a damn, whether a tinker's or not?
We're what we are and have what we've got—
(Including relatives and ancestors)*

SUPPLEMENT

To facilitate making a more complete family picture the following pages are provided for non-Booth contributors to the fourth and fifth generations. Note that the tree form containing the Founders' names in the upper left spaces will permit recording Gagnier, Smith, or Langley information as well as later contributions made to that particular branch of the family by others. The other tree form is for recording ancestors of the mate of any Booth. Family forms follow for detailed information about forbears of so-called non-Booths.
