

The Arms are sable, (black) a crescent (of gold) between three goats, argent, (white) horns, beards and hoofs, gold. Supporters, two wolves, dexter (right side) gules, (red,) sinister (left side) ermine, crest out of a ducal coronet gold, a goat's head white, horns and beard gold, between two white ostrich feathers.

The goats in the Arms signify the great perseverance of the family under difficulties, no less than enterprise. The crescent indicates the fact of their great ancestry from the female line fought with such great success against the Turks. The whole shows courage as well as daring.

The motto is "Fortis cadere, cedere non potest." The brave may fall, but cannot yield.

RUPERT VON FAHNESTOCK,

(from whom first sprung this family,) was made a BARON of the Roman Empire, by the Emperor Robert, of Normandy. [Robert of Normandy was in power A. D. 1054.]

The family continued to hold many high offices in the Imperial Courts until A. D. 1500, when COUNT HENRY VON FAHNESTOCK married into the Noble family of Brandenburg, the lands of which came to his wife, and he settled in that principality.

In A. D. 1644, COUNT JOSEPH VON FAHNESTOCK being one of the Nobles to whom the negotiations with the different Courts of Europe for the safety of the Empire was entrusted, was made one of the Committee to erect the House of Brandenburg into the Kingdom of Prussia; he being of so much importance in this duty was made Prime Minister of the New Kingdom in A. D. 1659.

Being delegated on a mission to Poland, he there saw and fell in love with Aloysia, the young and beautiful daughter of John Sobieski, the greatest of European Monarchs, by his first wife, Maria De La Grange, one of the Maids of Honor to the wife of Casimir, the former King. She was the wife of Zamoiski, Palantine of Landomir, and daughter of the Marquis De Anquien, and a confidant of her Mistress. She was a lady of great beauty and talent.

The only offspring of the Emperor and this lady was their accomplished daughter ALOYSIA.

After a most romantic courtship COUNT JOSEPH won the Northern beauty and bore her in triumph to his own home in Brandenburg, as it then was, what is now Prussia.

The name Fahnestock has been indifferently spelled, the former being a corruption of the original Farhnestock.

FAMILY MEMORIAL.

 ON the 6th of May, 1850, Charles Steffan, a young man from Hagen, in the Province of Westphalia, Prussia, introduced himself to me, claiming to be a connection of our family on his mother's side, she being a Fahnestock. He was just from home, and as some evidence beside his own word, presented a letter written by our worthy progenitor, Diedrich Fahnestock. I had the letter translated. I was so charmed with the spirit of the writer, that I had a strong desire to possess the original letter. Steffan left for the west carrying a letter of introduction from me, to my brother Walter Franklin, of Pittsburg. After Steffan left here, I telegraphed my brother "Keep that Dutch letter," which, of course, he could not understand until Steffan presented him the two letters in Pittsburg. Steffan parted with it very reluctantly. It is beautifully written on less than a half sheet of our size letter paper. I should rejoice to have Diedrich's picture, but he has left in this letter a much more valuable pen-picture of his own spirit than we could possibly have in our most perfect photographs, and we may all feel proud of being the descendants of such a God-honoring man. The longer I held this valuable relic, the more anxious I was to see the place of his nativity.

In 1872, being in Europe, I determined to find the place, though I had forgotten to take the old letter or a copy of the address. I had an idea it was near Cologne, and when there I remembered part of the address, "Hagen." I inquired for it, and was put on the "Eisenbahn" (railroad) for a feer stund (four hours) ride. We arrived at the place, but failed to find any of our name. Then I remembered it was "Halten, in the district of Hagen." I informed my landlord of the amended address, he said, "Ich wil der Berger master sanen," (the Mayor,) and in a few minutes he returned with the information that there was a family of a similar name at Halten, spelled Fahrenstuck. I procured a hack and in "ein stund" (one hour,) we were on the farm that Diedrich left in 1726, and went through the barn into his father's house, all under the same roof, one stairway answering to go to the hay-loft to the left, and to the bed-chambers to the right. There we found decendants of the same stock in possession of, and working the same land, held in the family probably two hundred years or more, but without any improvement, running in the same ruts that Diedrich's father left. They possessed photographs of George Fahnestock, his son Benjamin and grand-son George W. F., also many letters from the latter, and silver keep-sakes for younger members. They had a young daughter named Grace Enzie, after George's wife. We found Pennsylvania Dutch at an awful discount, scarcely worth anything; my wife was certainly a very great helpmate in this instance, as she was well educated in the German language. This family informed me that I was the first American Fahnestock that ever called on them. I said I was much gratified at seeing Diedrich's native place just as he left it one hundred and fifty years ago—not thirty days of improvement having been made. The old lady brought some fragrant flowers from a bush in the garden, said to be one hundred years old. I still have them. I also possess a photograph of the whole family still on the premises, also one of their house and barn. In April, 1877,

I received a copy of the Hagener Zeitung, announcing the death of John Casper Heinrich Fahrenstuck, April 6, 1877, in his eighty-third year. He was the last old man of the name in Prussia.

Who is there in the connection, that, upon carefully reading old Diedrich's letter of 1753, twenty-six years after his arrival here does not feel his heart glow with gratitude that he is a scion of such a stock? a man whose heart was evidently imbued with the reverence and the love of God.

I have obtained copies of the inscriptions on the old dilapidated sand-stones at the head of the graves of Diedrich and his wife, the names thereon spelled differently and the inscriptions partly buried in the ground. My first idea was to refresh them with the chisel, but I have relinquished that purpose, and resolved to erect a good substantial Italian stone, about as heretofore described.

The following is the address on Diedrich's letter to his brother, written in Lancaster County, near Ephrata:*

To my beloved and respected brother Johann Heinrich Fane-stuck, residing in Halten in the district of Hagen.

HALTEN.

My most beloved and dear brother J. H. Fane-stuck:

With most friendly greeting I inform thee that through the great kindness of the praise-worthy Preserver of all things, we are all well; myself, with my wife and children, wish and hope the same of thee and thine. I have written to thee last year very explicitly about all my circumstances, but have not received a letter in answer, consequently, I do not know whether thou hast received my letter.

This year my oldest son Casper goes out himself. I would have wished that he should also come to you, and he also would have done so most willingly, but it is very doubtful whether it can be done, for he has never been traveling yet, and, consequently, does not like to travel without company, which is likewise dangerous, and as it is considerably out of their way, I doubt whether those traveling with him would go along. They are going far up into the country. If, consequently, it should not be, I pray you not to think hard of him for it, as it is not from want of love, but only from want of possibility. Going and coming he will stop at Crefeld, where he is to have some clocks* made for us. If you should know the time when he will return, you might meet him there, but if this cannot be done, I pray you to write again. You may send the letters to Crefeld, there are three brothers living there, Wilhelmus, Christophorus and Lucas Heckers, to them you might send them.

*All of Diedrich's letters, as also those from Halten, were written in German, and I have had them translated.

For the present I do not know anything of consequence to write to you. I think you will have received my letter of last year, in which I informed you of all very circumstantially, herewith I close. I, my wife and children and my brother-in-law Wilhelmus, who is now living with me, greet you, and your wife and children and all our friends who are still living, with heart-felt friendship, and wishing you all joy and happiness, we commend you faithfully to the all-ruling hand of God.

I remain thy faithful and loving brother until death.

DIEDRICH FANESTUCK.

St. John's day, the 13th November, Anno 1753.

Knowing that G. W. Fahnestock, of Philadelphia, was much interested in anything pertaining to the history of our family, I forwarded to him the original, as well as a translation of Diedrich's letter, and the following is his reply :

PHILADELPHIA, February 2, 1865.

Dear Cousin, A. K :

I owe you an apology for not acknowledging at once the receipt of the manuscripts so kindly placed at my disposal. I expected every day to return them—hence the delay.

As a great part of the information contained in the chart was new to me, I have taken the liberty of retaining a copy for future use, as the basis of something more complete. Your brother William evidently contemplated something of the same kind. Although I never believed in living on the greatness or virtues of our ancestors, it is always a satisfaction to their descendants to look backward over an untarnished record. To follow out all the branches and twigs of our ancestral tree, would be no inconsiderable task, and involve time and patient labor. As I have leisure and inclination, I shall at least throw together the material for genealogical memoranda, which may be satisfactory and useful to those who are to take our places.

The work in hand for the present, is in compliance with an often repeated request from many friends, that I privately print my father's letters from abroad. This to me, will be a labor of love. It is proper to preface them with a brief memoir. In order to begin at the beginning I shall make some mention of his ancestry. To tell you the truth, I know little or nothing about them. My ignorance of German has prevented me from making research among family documents, and I must now rely upon translations. The volume will be intended for private circulation among our friends.

I have thought that a genealogy of the Fahnestock family might be interesting, as an addenda or appendix, so arranged as to be bound with the letters or separately. Its preparation would take time to insure accuracy.

I observe that one of the enclosed manuscripts contains information about the original ancestor Derick, his son Casper, &c., and I infer that your brother Wm. M. F., relied upon it as the basis of his chart. Do you recognize the hand-writing, or know who wrote it? It mentions that Derick after landing in New York in 1726, settled on the Raritan River, N. J., and mentions "small wood." Do you suppose it refers to the size of the trees, or was it the name of a place? I could not understand all of the manuscript, or decipher all of the names. Some of the facts seem to have been merely memoranda, to be reminders of fuller details.

My father mentioned a mountain in the Alps, a high peak in sight from Zurich, which bears the name of "Pfannenstock."

I herewith return you the manuscripts, with thanks for your kindness, and trust you will excuse my being somewhat troublesome.

I am very truly yours,

G. W. FAHNESTOCK.

PHILADELPHIA, February 4th, 1865.

Dear Cousin, A. K.

The sight of an autograph letter of our good old progenitor, Diederick Fanestuck, written upwards of a century ago, was quite a treat, and I do not wonder that you attach a high value to it. A touching sincerity and heartiness, with a spirit of true devotion pervade the whole letter. He was a good man beyond a peradventure.

In this letter he refers to a letter written by him the previous year to his friends in Germany. From a letter which I find among my father's papers, written to him from Hagen in April 1852, I think the letter of D. F., in 1752, is still in existence. Allusion is made to it as being still retained in the family. I wrote ten days ago to Hagen for copies of letters, and of the civil and ecclesiastical archives in which are recorded marriages, births and deaths of our ancestors, if such are still preserved. They are usually preserved with great care. Two years ago I obtained from the Palatinate, copies embracing 134 Wolffs, since 1700, when I prepared a centennial "Memorial" of my mother's parents.

Many letters and family memoranda are doubtless still preserved by some of the elders of the family in this country, which would be of interest to perpetuate. Do you know who possesses the family records of Dietrick F., and his children? They are probably in the old German family Bible, if still in existence.

I am much indebted for the use of this valuable letter, which I have copied, and herewith enclose, with the translation. I hope you keep it in a fire-proof safe.

I see in Rupp's 30,000 names, that Casper F., returned to America in 1754 in the ship "John and Elizabeth," from Amsterdam, and was on the sick list. Carl Gleim was also a passenger on the same vessel, as mentioned in W. M. F's mem.

With many thanks for this favor, I am

Truly yours,

G. W. FAHNESTOCK.

Diedrich was a peace man, opposed to the system of war, conscientiously believing that no man was justifiable under any circumstances in taking the life of another.

Frederick William was a tyrant, and in his ridiculous desire to raise regiments of giant guards paid no regard to individual rights. In the town of Zurich, a recruiting officer in disguise entered the shop of a carpenter and engaged a stout chest to be made, six feet six inches in length, at "least, at all events, longer than yourself." At the appointed time he called for the chest; looked at it, exclaiming: "Too short." I am certain it is over six feet six, said the carpenter, and to prove it, jumped into it. The officer slammed the lid and locked it, then whistled, and three stout fellows came in, who shouldered the chest and carried it through the street to a remote place outside the town. Here the chest was opened, and poor Zimmerman was stifled to death. Diedrich did not fancy this manner of enlisting, or becoming one of King William's "giant guards," so he concluded to seek an asylum of safety in America, where he suddenly found his way. Whilst on the voyage his second child, Andrew, died. When on landing in New York, in 1726, his inventory of goods and chattels was as follows: "One axe, a weaver's shuttle, a Bible and one dollar." They settled for the time on the Raritan River, in New Jersey; thence to Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. In 1749, June 21st, Diedrich obtained by patent, from the State of Pennsylvania, three hundred and twenty-nine acres of land, at a cost of one hundred and forty dollars, situate on a branch of the Cocalico Creek, two miles from Old Ephrata, and one mile south of what is now New Ephrata, where he lived and died, October 10, 1775, leaving his sons, Peter and Diedrich, executors of his estate.

Two of Diedrich's sisters accompanied him from his home in Halten. One of them married a Mr. Lawshey, who settled at Annville, Lebanon County, Pennsylvania, the other sister, Armella, united with the Seventh Day Baptist Society, at Ephrata.

Casper, the oldest child of Diedrich and Margareta, was born at the homestead at Halten, near the Rhine. In 1753, Casper, first son of Diedrich, visited Prussia on business. In 1754 he returned, in company with Carl Gleim, as is seen by the register. Hence the house of Casper has descended from parents of foreign birth, whereas all the other branches descended from American born parents.

On my return from Europe, being, perhaps, the best posted up, I felt the importance of giving the family some information which they could not otherwise possess—many not even knowing who their grand-parents were—I concluded to contribute my mite for general family information, and to this end opened correspondence with several branches of the family, asking information such as they could give, then handing the collection over to brother Franklin, to set it in order for the press. My brother William M. commenced the task many years ago, but fell asleep before it was finished. Then Geo. W. F. commenced the same work, and on his last Western journey with his daughter Grace, borrowed all my brother William had prepared on the subject. They, George and Grace, perished, jumping from the burning steamer United States, into the Ohio River, and with them all our family records were lost. Therefore the necessity of another effort which, it will be seen, I commenced thirteen years ago.

A cordial, kindly feeling has been evinced by many members of the family in promptly furnishing such information as they possessed; and, not to be invidious, we give thanks to all, equally, for large or small contributions to the makeup of this Memorial.

In the Autumn of 1777, when the wounded soldiers were transferred from Brandywine to Ephrata, Samuel Fahnestock, a lad of about fourteen, by his untiring attention and his coolness among the sick and wounded, attracted the attention of General Hand, who, himself an eminent physician, advised Samuel's father to educate him for a physician. His father accepted the suggestion, and his future career fully justified the prophetic spirit of General Hand. As Samuel increased in years and practice he became especially distinguished for his treatment of fevers, and the remarkable success attending his skill throughout the prevalence of an epidemic, won for him the most flattering encomiums of the distinguished Dr. Rush. He died in 1836, in the seventy-third year of his age.

The practice of medicine appears to have been a favorite profession, as Diedrich the second had three sons, Samuel, Daniel and John, who all practiced medicine very successfully. Dr. W. B. Fahnestock, of Lancaster, son of Dr. Samuel, just spoken of, has been very successful. Dr. Thomas G. C. F., Dentist, of Cincinnati, Ohio, Dr. C. S. F., Surgeon, Laporte, Indiana, Dr. Augustus A. F., Elkhart, Indiana, are also of the family. Dr. W. M. F., late of Bordentown, New Jersey, was physician to the Bonaparte family when they visited there.

One of our family, Conrad, was a printer, and published a paper in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, during the Alien and Sedition Acts. Being a warm supporter of Jefferson he was outspoken against the administration of Adams, and in consequence with others was arrested and thrown into prison. It was, however, just upon the eve of an election and he was released in a few days.

Of the early history of this family we have an account brought to this country, about twenty-five years ago, by a Prussian naval officer, who was traveling on a pleasure trip to see this country. He brought with him the early history of several families who had friends and relations in America. We give the statement just as it was received by Mr. Samuel Houston, a son of Mrs. Esther Houston, who was a daughter of Dr. William B. Fahnestock, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania. See Coat of Arms furnished on a small scale from the original, by Mr. John Fahnestock, Engraver and Printer of Astoria, Queens County, New York, and No. 25 Rose street, New York City, who has generously contributed a specimen of his artistic engraving for this Memorial.

The name still holds its position, as is evidenced by a dispatch to the Pittsburg Evening Chronicle, bearing date, Copenhagen, Denmark, May 30, 1870: "The new Danish Cabinet has been completed, as follows: (All recited) amongst which is Minister of Interior, Fahnestock."

PROVINCE OF WESTPHALIA, PRUSSIA, BERGHEIM, May 23, 1873,

Mr. A. K. Fahnestock:

For sending your picture, I express to you, in the name of my mother, my sincere thanks. I am sorry that on account of the language your stay here was so short, and that I, consequently, was unable to converse with you about things generally. I limit myself to this, to add a Photograph of the neighboring, romantic and beautifully situated little town of Limburg, on the Lenne, the Pearl of Westphalia, as it is called by Frelingrath.

HALTEX, February 16, 1876.

Dear Friend :

Yours of 16th November, '75, received with pleasure. I have heard of your good trip.

We were astonished that you are willing to inquire about your fore-father's family records. I am always ready to hunt these up. Geo. W. F. is also willing. I have sent to him all records up to 1765, which was given for his own information, and at the same time those from Hirtzbruch. Pastor Miller, of Hagen, has given G. W. F. much information; he was Pastor of the Church. Fredrick Hany up to Diedrich's father, Laborius F. This is as far as you wish. You can get this information from George's mother. George says he values these highly for the family hereafter. The letter in which Diedrich gives his voyage is in Philadelphia.

Truly yours,

CASPER H. FAHRENSTUCK.

We might give a detailed history of many of our name who have left an honorable record in this and other States in the suppression of the late rebellion. The war record of 1861 shows that Allen L. Fahnestock, of Glasford, Illinois, enlisted a company of one hundred men, among whom was J. L. Fahnestock. This was Company I, of the Eighty-sixth Regiment, Illinois Volunteers. A. L. F. having sacrificed a very lucrative business, and being popular was elected Captain. J. L. F. was chosen Second Lieutenant. The regiment was commanded by Colonel Irons until August 13, 1863, when he died, and the command fell to Colonel Magee. He resigned March 1864. Captain Allen F. was then chosen Colonel of the Regiment and commanded until the 21st of June, 1865, when the Regiment was discharged. This Regiment had hard service for two years and ten months; fought in sixty battles, marched thirty-five hundred miles, and traveled two thousand miles by rail. Out of a full Regiment in 1862 they mustered out of service in 1865 only three hundred and eighty-five men. Dr. Samuel Fahnestock, attached to the Medical department of the Sixty-third Regiment, United States Infantry, a man of sixty, and beloved by all, was taken from his tent near Vicksburg. His remains were found in the woods in an almost nude state, with an ear cut off and a ball through his head.

In the Keystone State we find Edward G. Fahnestock, First Lieutenant Company E, of Gettysburg. Casper Fahnestock, Musician, April 22, 1861, Company E., of Westchester. C. B. Fahnestock, Corporal, Company K., Sixty-second Regiment, Allegheny. C. H. Fahnestock, of Venango County, mustered out July 1st., 1865. Jerome Fahnestock, Luzerne County, July 10, 1863. Walter F. Fahnestock, Jr., Harrisburg, November 27, 1861, Sergeant Company E. Seventy-sixth Regiment, wounded in foot; mustered out December 3, 1864. George H. Fahnestock, brother of the above, discharged with his Company. W. F. Fahnestock, father of the two last named, served with the old home guard at Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. Ephraim A. Fahnestock, private, of Huntingdon, September 20, 1861, Company C., Seventy-sixth Regiment, mustered out December 6, 1865.

We mention the above to show that the Tribe are on hand at roll call.

In 1879, January 14th, after long and anxious searching, I came in possession of more of Diedrich's letters or copies of them.

HALTEN, December 23, 1878.

A. K. Fahnestock,

Dear Friend :

I received your valuable letter of November 22nd. Enclosed I send you copies of the old letters which you desire. These are copies of all Diedrich's letters which I possess. I had copied only the most important before I sent them to Philadelphia. The letter of February 17, 1765, I copied myself, and my son Fritz the four others; he is now thirteen years old; he learns well and wishes to become a teacher; his own teacher joins him in this idea, but my income is too small to accomplish it. I do not know what I had best let him learn. I am glad to learn you have had handsome tomb stones erected to our ancestors, but I am sorry I cannot see them.

Is the health of Madame Fahnestock of Philadelphia good? For the approaching New Year I wish you and your dear ones happiness, with God's blessing. May God preserve your life many, many years in health and peace. We all send our hearty greetings.

C. H. F. FAHRENSTUCK.

NEW YORK, October 15, 1726.

Dearest father, also mother-in-law, sister and all good friends and acquaintances:

By God's grace we fortunately arrived here at New York on Michaelmas day, and would be pleased to know that you are all hale and hearty. Concerning our voyage, God be thanked, we need not to be troubled about meat or drink, for the good God has richly provided for us. My wife and self suffered sea sickness for eight or nine days. My sister and son Casper Diedrich, have been as well as fish in the water. We experienced some severe storms, but when our necessities were greatest the grace of God was mightiest.

We have consigned to the earth here in New York our son Andrew, and another little child who died on the ocean. The voyage was a prosperous one; we entered our ship with one hundred and five passengers and landed with one hundred and seven. From Holland to England occupied two weeks, and from England to New York ten weeks, in all twelve weeks, seeing nothing but water and sky.

The farmers here live as masters, and have it much better than with you. The citizens here have everything full and plenty; meat, butter, flour, sugar, buckwheat, corn and milk. The garden vegetables are in superabundance; fruits of every kind, apples, peaches, salad, nuts, &c., indeed everything that you could wish; they don't know how rich they are. You can get as much as you want for little money; a quarter of mutton for six or nine pence. Farmers have their fresh roast every day; they can go anywhere to hunt wild game. We had many young folks on ship who serve three years for their passage. If you are disposed to come, may the blessed God lead you as he led the children of Israel, and send his angel before you to prepare the way.

DIEDRICH FAHRENSTUCK

EPHRATA, October 25, 1728.

Dear friends, relations and all good acquaintances in Christ Jesus. I write to inform you that I have fortunately reached this country, America, and I cannot sufficiently thank the omnipotent God that He has safely conducted us across the great broad wild sea. I have learned from your letter that you also want to come over here in the year 1729. My wife, Anna Margarette, was filled with joy when she heard the news. We are all well. Three days ago the blessed God gave us a young son. I have bought no land, it is high and I have no money. I leased a farm for five years, for which I am to pay twelve rix dollars every year rent. All who have land must have their own horses, for people here do not go on foot; when they wish to go to church they go on horseback or in wagons. Now, my dearest father and mother-in-law, I send you my hearty greetings. As you think of coming over you must provide (here follows a long list of various articles), each of you must bring a long gun, four and a half feet long, such as you pay five rix dollars for; they cost thirteen or fifteen here. There are so many wild pigeons here that they break the limbs of the trees with their weight; I have brought down sixty-two at one shot. Each one of you bring two guns. A good mower gets forty-eight stivers a day; a woman at binding thirty-six stivers; a carpenter gets a rix dollar; all get boarding with their wages. I cannot describe the land, it is good and fruitful. The people here make bread of wheat, which they grind fine and sift it. Bring tin ware from England, plates, spoons, &c.

Now, farewell! I greet you heartily, and wish you God's blessing, but before all things, seek that your whole heart and mind may be turned to God that he may guide you according to his holy will for the salvation and happiness of your souls, for He is faithful who calls us, amen. Greet for me all the children who walk according to God's will.

DIEDRICH FAHRENSTUCK.

EPHRATA, February 17, 1765.

A hearty greeting to you dear cousin, also your dear mother, brothers and sisters, sons and daughters. Your letter of 1769 I did not receive till 1765. I do not know how it happened that I did not see the bearer and heard nothing of him, nor have I been able to hear anything of your circumstances, except that you were well at the time it was written. As to me and my dear ones, praise be to the most High, we are all pretty well; in outward circumstances we have been blessed and have had peace and rest. The war with the savages, which, for some time, caused our part of the country much disquiet, and almost reached our border and dealt very cruelly with those living on the border, has been averted. If this disturbance arises again we must receive it as from the hand of God, who directs all things for the best. Concerning my own domestic affairs, I am now seventy years old, but am still strong and hearty, God be thanked. My wife is rather sickly. We have eight children, seven sons, and one daughter. Five are married. The two youngest sons and the daughter are still single. One of the sons is a doctor and lives twelve hours distant from here, over on the river called Susquehanna (now Harrisburg).

Here I have four hundred acres of land, on which I have a mill with three sets of stones, one for coarse flour another for fine flour, for merchants, and also a saw-mill. On this land lives first the doctor, another son at the grist mill and another at the saw-mill. My oldest son lives near me and farms a portion of the land. The second lives next to me and has also a property. Now I have informed you briefly of my circumstances, and would like to know of yours. I have written several times and have received no answer, so I don't know whether you got my letters. When you write again send your letters to Creveld, to William Nocker. He will forward them to his brother at Ephrata, and so I will certainly get them. Now I must close, and commend myself to you all, together with former greetings from myself, my wife, also my sons' wives. Till parted in death your faithful uncle in the protection of the Most High.

DIEDRICH FAHRENSTUCK.

At the Land office I took a fac-simile copy of the original survey by John Taylor, dated October 12, 1735, of Diedrich's farm of three hundred and twenty-nine acres, it having twelve corners, and the kind of tree named at each corner. I visited the place, Samuel Fahnestock, of Millway, driving me around and pointing out the houses occupied (at one time) by the different sons of Diedrich, of whom Samuel is a fair representative, standing six feet two-and-a-half inches.

For years past I have been trying to trace up the whereabouts of an old linen coat, brought over from Halten by Diedrich, in 1726, and this day, February 5, 1879, I have possession of it. A white linen frock-tail coat with large lapels over side pockets, ten metal buttons in front, and no collar. It is Germany every inch of it. Andrew Fahnestock, the Seventh Day Baptist preacher, had it, and I obtained it from his daughter Dinah Monn, at Quincy, Franklin County, Pennsylvania.

Uncle Andrew, the preacher, was an original character. His dress was drab colored with broad brimmed white hat, and he carried a long cane. As he was passing along in Waynesborough many years ago a set of rowdies at a tavern concluded to have some fun with him. Their spokesman addressed him thus: "I understand your name is Fahnestock?" "So they call me." "I understand you are a preacher of the gospel?" "I try to preach sometimes." "Then you believe in a heaven and a hell?" "I read of both those places in my Bible." "And you believe in a devil, do you?" "I read something about him also in my Bible." "Did you ever see the devil?" "I never want to see him plainer than I do just now." Their fun was ended, they had no more questions to ask.

Andrew was a man of great faith. On his last visit to me he informed me that he was at one time worth sixteen thousand dollars, and added, "I was defrauded out one-half of that sum, and to save the balance I gave it to the poor." I expressed my astonishment and asked why he did not keep some for his support in his old days, he said: "The Lord has never suffered me to want for bread, and I am not afraid to trust him for the balance of my days." He took no salary for his services as a preacher. When he was a young man he was a genius; he made his own loom and gearing and wove figured linen in great variety of patterns.

TO THE FAHNESTOCK TRIBE.—I have been greatly interested in hunting up the material for this Memorial, and as I am in my seventy-third year I have often feared that I might pass away before its completion. I have reason to be thankful that it is now ready for the press, and I trust it may prove very interesting to many, if not all, members of our extensive family.

A. K. FAHNESTOCK.

P. S. Any information that will lead me to the discovery of Diedrich's family Bible and record will be kindly received.

FAHNESTOCK FAMILY REGISTER.

THE FAHNESTOCK FAMILY REGISTER.—We spell the Progenitor's name as he did, Diedrich Fanestuck. All the families in this country spell it as first above given.

In this Register we use the Christian or given name only, as the head of each family is a Fahnestock.

We give the maiden name of the wife in full, and designate marriage by coupling the two with a bracket, then the names of the children follow.

When a daughter marries we place the name of her husband opposite her own and follow her no farther.

We give the place of residence on the left margin of such heads of families as we can.

The date of marriage follows the two names coupled with a bracket.

We use good writing paper for the Register and leave one-half blank, so that any corrections may be made, and future families may find space to fill in and make records for themselves, and preserve their own virtues.
