PREFACE.

Bradford's, Bancroft's, Lee's, Freeman's and Strykers Histories as well as the "Sinnott, Rogers, Coffin, etc., Family Histories", also files of Friends Meetings and Mount Holly Court House Records, and the "Ancestry of the Haines and other Families", were the sources of information in compiling this little history of New Jersey Colonists which is as nearly accurate and complete as the records make possible and will help to perpetuate the fortitude and stoicism of these colonists, as well as the assistance, these families have rendered this country in its building and growth.

With thanks to Henry Shinn of Mount Holly for his inspiration and to my husband and sister Charlotte for material assistance.

DAKOTA R. BALDRY,

Chapter I.

THE HAINES FAMLY.

The History of the Haines family of N. J. was compiled by Richard Haines of Medford and like the data of the Haines family in the Anson Phelps Stokes Record follows the fortunes of the different branches from William the Conqueror to the present time. This Coat of Arms or seal was conferred upon Nicholas Haynes of Hackney in 1578. Literally translated the motto reads "With sails and with oars:" freely—"With might and main." Hayne Castle descended to an only daughter, Tameson Haines, in 1600 and remained in the family until 1870. Col. John Haynes born at Coddicott, Hertford, England, left his sons, Robert and Hezikiah, at his splendid estate "Copford Hall" in Essex when he sailed for America on "The Griffin" in 1633 with 160 head of cattle, 8,000 pounds in money and a yearly income of 1,000 pounds to establish with Hooker and other English settlers the Colony of Connecticut—then a wilderness. He became the third Governor of Massachusetts Bay Colony and in 1639 the first Governor of Connecticut, to which office he was elected every alternate year until his death at Hartford in 1654. His first wife was Mary Thornton. He married as his second wife

(Note) Hackney, Middlesex County, England.

The Gov. Haynes' Mansion was on corner of Front and Arch Street, Hartford.

Mabel Harlakenden, the daughter of Richard. She came to America in 1635 on the ship "Defence" with her brother, Lieut. Colonel Roger Harlakenden. She was born 9-27-1614 and was a descendant of Edward III, 1312, and the Dukes of Gloucester, Stafford and Westmoreland. This painting was made at her father's famous country seat, Earls Colne, Essex, England, a haunt of Cromwell and Richard Baxter. It shows her with fair hair, in a brown frock trimmed with red and grey, wearing a necklace of pearls. This couple, greatly beloved by the colonists, had five children. In all Gov. Haines had eight children. Ruth married Samuel Wyllys of Hartford, Mary married Jos. Cook in England, Mabel married Judge James Russell of Charlestown, Massachusetts. Hezekiah, Robert and Mary were children by Gov. Haines' first wife.

Joseph who graduated from Harvard in 1658 became Pastor of First Church on Gold Street in Hartford, where Olivia and Caroline Stokes have erected memorial gates to his illustrious father. Copford Hall descended to General Hezekiah and Robert died. There was also a son, Roger.

Now we come to John and his descendants, known from his beautiful letters to "cousin" Fitzjohn Winthrop, by whom he was nursed through small pox. He graduated from Harvard University in 1656 and returned to England where he took his M.A. at Cambridge. He became a minister at Colchester and married Hanna. He was vicar of Stanaway near Copford Hall. His will was signed in Sept., 1670. Following his great grandfather's example, the next John sailed for America and lived the first winter in a cave on Rancocas Creek, near Lumberton, Burlington County, N. J. Haines port is named for this early pioneer. He was followed by his father and mother, Richard and Margaret, who sailed from Northamptonshire on 4-23-1682 on the ship "Amity" landing at Burlington with their five other children, Richard, William, Thomas, Mary and Joseph. See Morant's History of Essex on Rev. John, also Mass. Historical Society Proceedings. This branch descended from William.

Nathan Haines took an active part in the American Revolution. His tombstone is south of the place where the old Coles Church stood, in Colestown Cemetery, in Evesham, Burlington Co., N. J. Nathan raised a company of soldiers for the Revolution. He was opposed to war as at variance with his Quaker principles but his wife Dorcas Pendergrast of the West Indies, convinced him that a man of his wealth should use it and his influence for his country. He raised a small army and set out for Perth Amboy, N. J. A parrot on the way called to him "Quaker, quaker, fighting quaker," as he still wore the quaker garb. He was captured by the British at Haddenfield but later released. When he returned his home had been plundered and his cattle driven off. From Wm. Lippincott's paper "The Moorestown Republican," Moorestown, N. J. 1911. Aaron L. Haines and Thomas Haines of Burlington Co. were also in the Continental Army. See Strykers Officers and Men of N. J. in the American Revolution. The Haines family were Orthodox Quakers. Barclay Haines built and navigated the first steamboat on the Delaware River.

Chapter II. THE ROGERS FAMILY.

Bradford's history tells of the arrival on the Mayflower in 1620 at Plymouth, Mass. of Thomas Rogers and his son Joseph. The other children and the wife of Thomas followed a year later. Thomas died in the first sickness. Joseph married and had six children, Sarah, Joseph, Thomas, Elizabeth, John, Mary, James and Hanna. He died at Eastham, Mass., in 1678. John was appointed administrator for Thomas's estate. Freeman's history of Cape Cod gives the history of John's family. He signed an instrument for lot 32 at Burlington, N. J. on Sept. 9th, 1727 and his son William was given a commission as Lieutenant in the British Army in America by Viscount Cornbury Feb. 4th, 1705 at Fort Anne N. Y. It was his grandson Wm. Rogers III who was the Revolutionary hero of the Rogers line. He was an express rider, and despatch bearer in the war. Although he was a Quaker he gave bountifully of his time and money to the cause of American liberty. He thwarted the attempt of the Hessian soldiers to destroy his grist mill which stood on his plantation between Mount Holly and Rancocas, N. J., bordered on the front by the shell road and at the back by Rancocas Creek. The place is now known as the McIlvaine Farm. Here were also his distillery for apple-jack and cherry bounce and the factory for making cement from oyster shells. The manor house built from bricks brought as ballast in the ships from England bore on its side elevation these letters and the date picked out in a different shade of brick:

William P. Taylor, born September 28th, 1832, died June 13th, 1901, at Reynoldsburg, Ohio.

Nicholas Tokolyi, the grandfather of Amalia Reich, was dean of the University of Prague. His great grandson Dr. Emil Reich received degrees from Prague, Buda Pest and Vienna Universities, and after 4 years in France and 5 in America of continual study he lectured at Oxford, Cambridge and London Universities, England. His lectures at Claridges in London drew forth so many of the royalty and nobility—many times including the queen—that his audiences were nicknamed “diamond dusted.” He possessed an abnormal eloquence and a fascinating wit and was complete master of six languages. His well selected library contained an index to five million books with which he was familiar. His book called “Germany’s Swelled Head” or “Germany’s Madness” was a warning and a forecast of the World War. When he died he was working on “The Birth of Christianity.”

Some of his other works were: History of Civilization, Graeco-Roman Institutions, Hungarian Literature, Handbook of Geography, General History, Atlas of Ancient History, Atlas of Modern History, Principal Chapters from Great Philosophers, Fundamental Principals of Evidence, and Imperialism.

Otto Reich furnished the illustrations and placed them in the Catholic Encyclopedia, as well as placing the bishoprics on every map.
