HULLS OF NEW ENGLAND.

Joseph Hulls FIVE persons of this name are to be found in the early history of New England, who are supposed to have been brothers: John, George, Richard, Joseph and Robert Hull.

John Hull was admitted freeman by the General Court of Massachusetts, August 7, 1632. He was Captain of an artillery company, and died at Newbury, February, 1670.

George Hull, of Dorchester, was admitted freeman March 4, 1633. He was Representative to the General Court in 1634, and afterwards removed to Connecticut.

Richard Hull was made freeman in April, 1634. He removed to New Haven, Connecticut, in 1639.* His son John was baptized in 1640, and removed to Derby, which town he represented in General Assembly. Afterwards removed to Wallingford, where he was known as Dr. John Hull, and owned a mile square of land. Two of his sons, John and Joseph, remained in Derby, and from Joseph descended General William Hull, and Commodore Isaac Hull.

Joseph Hull, of Hingham, was admitted freeman in 1635. He was Representative to General Court of Massachusetts in 1638 and 1639. The town of Hull, formerly Nantasket, was named for this Joseph, according to Savage.

Robert Hull, blacksmith, of Boston, was admitted freeman in 1637. He died July 28, 1666. His son John, or as Sewall's Diary says, grandson, was made freeman in 1649, and was a goldsmith, and a highly respected citizen of Boston. His children all died young, except Hannah, who married Samuel Sewall, Chief Justice of the Province in 1676. John Hull became Treasurer and Master of the Mint in 1652, and left a large estate when he died in 1683. There is a tradition that when his daughter Hannah was married to Judge Sewall, Mr. Hull put her on a scale and balanced her with silver coin for her dowry.

28. WILLIAM HULL, son of Joseph 3d, of Derby, born June 24, 1753. Yale College 1772. Taught school, and afterwards studied law at Litchfield, and was admitted to the bar in 1775. In April of that year he was chosen Captain of the first company raised in Derby, and marched with Col. Webb's Regt. to Cambridge, where he took part in the siege of Boston. He was a Major in the 8th Massachusetts regiment in 1777, Lieut. Colonel in 1779, and Assistant Inspector of the army under Baron Steuben. He was in the battles of Long Island, White Plains, Trenton, Princeton, Ticonderoga, Stillwater, Saratoga, Bemontmouth and Stony Point. He commanded a successful expedition against Morrisania, for which he received the thanks of Washington and of Congress. When the army was disbanded at the close of the war, Colonel Hull was selected by Washington as the Lieut. Colonel of the one regiment of Infantry retained in the service, and was stationed at West Point, 1783-4.

In 1786 he retired from the service, and engaged in the practice of law at Newton, Mass., where he had married a few years before. In January, 1787, he acted as volunteer Aid to General Lincoln in the suppression of Shay's Rebellion. In 1793 he was appointed a Commissioner to make a treaty with the Indians in the Northwest. In 1798, Colonel Hull visited England and France, and witnessed in Paris part of the First Revolution. On his return he was appointed by the Governor of Mass., Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, for Middlesex County, and was elected Major General of the third Division of the Mass. Militia. He was Senator in the State Legislature from 1798 to 1800, when he resigned on being appointed by Thomas Jefferson to be Governor of Michigan Territory.

When he removed with his family to Detroit, his route was by way of the Mohawk river and Oswego, up Lake Ontario in a boat to Buffalo, and thence to Detroit in a Schooner, which made occasional trips between those villages. Being in Buffalo in 1804, on his way to Boston, he writes to his friends there that he shall travel from Buffalo to Boston with his own horses, and expects to do it in three weeks time. Such was the State of New York at that period.

In February, 1812, war then being imminent, the Indians were becoming hostile, and twelve hundred Ohio volunteers, with three hundred men of the 4th United States Infantry, were ordered to Detroit, then the Western frontier post. Governor Hull being then in Washington, was asked to accept the command of these troops, which he declined, but the officer appointed being taken sick, Governor Hull consented to lead the troops to Detroit with the sole object of protecting the inhabitants of the Territory against the Indians. Governor Hull opened a road through the wilderness, two hundred miles to Detroit, and when he arrived was ordered to invade Canada, with a force wholly inadequate and without the support of any naval power whatever, though he had insisted upon its necessity, and had the pledge of the Government that he should be so supported. The campaign was a failure, Detroit was lost, and Governor Hull was held accountable for disasters which were caused by others. For a more full account of these transactions, see:

It was not until 1824 that General Hull was able to procure from the War Department, copies of documents necessary for his vindication. He then published "Memoirs of the Campaign of 1812," which, wherever it was read, had the effect of changing public opinion, formed as it had been from the statements of Government editors, and military men who, like Lewis Cass, had risen on the downfall of General Hull. In 1825, a public dinner was given to General Hull by leading men of Boston, to express their sympathy with him. The same year he visited his native town, Derby, where he was received with marked attention, but the fatigues of the journey brought on an illness, which proved fatal. He died Nov. 25, 1825, aged 72 years.

William Hull married, in 1781, Sarah, only daughter of Hon. Abraham Fuller, of Newton, who survived him less than a year. She died August 21, 1826, aged 67.

33. ISAAC HULL, son of Joseph Hull 4th, of Derby, born March, 1773. When a boy he was sent by his father to his uncle William in Newton, who adopted him and sent him to school. Having a great fondness for the sea, Isaac went at an early age as a cabin boy, and in a few years rose to the command of a ship. In 1798 he entered the Navy as Lieutenant. In 1800, he was first Lieutenant of the Frigate Constitution, and his first exploit was leading a party which cut out a French letter-of-marque from under the guns of a battery in Port Platte, St. Domingo. He was in 1802-5 in command of the Schooner Nautilus and Brig Argus, in the squadrons of Preble and Barron, at the attacks on Tripoli, and in the latter vessel he assisted General Eaton at the capture of Derne. In 1806, he was made Captain. In 1812, being in command of the Frigate Constitution, he made a very skilful escape after a chase of three days, from a heavy British squadron on the American coast, which has become famous in naval history for the seamanship displayed therein. In August of the same year he met one of the same ships which had chased him in July, the Frigate Guerriere, Capt. Dacres, and took her, after a sharp conflict of thirty minutes, out of which the American ship came almost unhurt, while the Guerriere lost all her masts, and was left a wreck on the water, with the loss of seventy-eight men killed and wounded, while Capt. Hull reported a loss of fourteen. The result of this first sea-fight of the war caused great excitement on both sides of the ocean.

Captain Hull was afterwards in command of various squadrons in different seas, and of the Charlestown and Philadelphia Navy Yards. He married, in 1813, Anna Hart, of Saybrook, Conn. Died February, 1843, without issue.

Cooper, in his Naval History, says of Captain Hull, that "his dexterity in handling a ship under canvass was ever remarkable. In this particular he was one of the most skilful seamen of his time, as he was also remarkable for coolness in moments of hazard."

52. SARAH HULL, eldest daughter of William Hull, born 1783; married, August 26, 1802, John McKesson, lawyer, of New York. He was born in Adams County, Pennsylvania, 1772. She died February 26, 1810, aged 27. He died June, 1829, aged 57.
