P R E F A C E

THE 'Genealogy of the Knoxes' referred to by Dr. M'Crie in his Life of John Knox (Note A, 6th Ed. 1839), was in the possession of the family of the Rev. James Knox, minister of Scone, fifth minister in lineal descent from William Knox, first Protestant minister of Cockpen, and nephew of the Reformer, who died in 1776. In 1838 it was found in the repositories of Miss Charlotte Knox, the last survivor of his family. Fresh material was collected by the late Rev. David Crawford, D.D., Edinburgh, to 1857; and the Genealogy has been brought down to the present year by his elder son, who acknowledges special indebtedness to the Rev. James Young's Life of Welsh and to the Rev. Hew Scott's Fasti Ecclesiæ Scoticanæ, both of which works have materially aided him in making the present edition more complete than it could otherwise have been. Parish Registers have also been helpful, as in them additional descendants have been found.

GENEALOGY OF THE KNOXES

RANFURLIE, near Paisley, was the seat of an ancient family of the name of Knox. The names of the elder pervices were Ochter, John, and William. This estate continued in the name upwards of 500 years, being of rent £500 per annum, a part whereof was Ladyland. Sometime before the Reformation a brother of the family, being laird of Gifford, near Haddington,¹ had two sons—William, merchant in Preston; and John, the Reformer. John, the Reformer, married Marjory, fifth daughter of Richard Bowes of Aske and South Cowtown, by whom he had two sons—Nathaniel, born at Geneva in May 1557; and Eleazar, also born there in the year following. Their mother died towards the close of 1560. Both matriculated at the University of Cambridge on 24th November 1572, a few days after their father's death. Nathaniel attained the degree of A.B., and both became fellows of St. John's College. Nathaniel died of tertian ague, in 1580, during his curriculum. Eleazar, University Preacher, in 1587, became vicar of Clacton Magna, in Essex, which office he held for four years, and, dying in 1591, was interred in the chapel of St. John's College, Cambridge. By their death the Reformer's family became extinct in the male line.

The Reformer, by his second marriage, in March 1564, with Margaret, daughter of Andrew, Lord Stewart of Ochiltree, had three daughters, viz. :—(1) Martha, who married Alexander Fairlie, eldest son and heir of Braid, a property near Edinburgh. She died 1st December 1592. Issue—John, William, Nathaniel, and Elspet. (2) Margaret, who married Mr.² Zachary

² In preceding centuries 'Mr.' was prefixed to the names of those who attained the degree of A.M.

Pont, eldest son of Robert Pont, minister of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh. He was minister of Bower and Watten in Caithness, and died on 20th January 1619. Of their marriage there were two sons—Robert and Samuel. (3) Elizabeth, who married Mr. John Welsh of Ayr, formerly of Kirkcudbright (1594-1600), and previously of Selkirk (1589-1594). He began his ministry at Ayr in 1600,¹ and continued there for five years, labouring with ardent zeal, persevering energy, and much success. A strenuous upholder of the rights and spiritual independence of the Church, he took a prominent part in opposing the policy of King James the VI., which, if carried out, would, he believed, have bereft her of her sacred rights. His opposition led to his being imprisoned in the Castle of Blackness, along with Mr. John Forbes, minister of Alford. For refusing by a formal declination the authority of the Privy Council to judge in things spiritual, the king determined to bring the prisoners in Blackness Castle and other places to trial for high treason, and ultimately, in October 1606, Welsh and five others were sentenced to banishment from his dominions for life. On 7th November 1606, at 2 A.M., Welsh and his associates sailed from Leith for France, after engaging in prayer for protection. Welsh, soon after his arrival there, began to study the French language, and so rapid was his progress that in a few months he was able to preach in it with fluency, to the surprise of his friends, and also of the natives. He was, in 1608, called to the Protestant congregation of Jonsac, where he remained eight years; afterwards to that of Nerac, and then to St. Jean d'Angely. The Town Council of Ayr regularly remitted his stipend for several years after his banishment. During his pastorate at St. Jean d'Angely the place was besieged, in 1620, by Louis XIII., but the inhabitants gallantly defending their city, a satisfactory treaty was concluded, and the king remained for some time to refresh his army. Welsh was therefore strongly advised not to preach on Sabbath, as it would give offence and might endanger his life, Protestant worship in proximity to royalty being prohibited. But, nothing daunted, he preached to an audience more numerous than usual. The Duke of Espernon apprehended him at the close of the service by command of the king, and took him to Louis to answer for himself, when a remarkable interview took place. The king demanded how he presumed to preach heresy whilst he was near. Welsh said, 'Sire, if your Majesty knew what I preached you would command others and come yourself to hear it. I preach salvation by Jesus Christ; and sure I am your conscience tells you your own works will never merit salvation for you; I preach there is none on earth above you, which none of those that adhere to the Pope will say.'¹ So pleased was Louis with Welsh's fearless and decided reply that he exclaimed, 'Very well, father, you shall be my minister!'¹ assuring him also of protection in the discharge of official duty. The following year the town was again taken, and Louis caused his house to be guarded, and himself and family conveyed in safety to Rochelle at the nation's expense.

In 1622 evil times fell on St. Jean d'Angely. An edict was issued to demolish its walls and fortifications, to abolish its local government, and to divest it of its privileges as a Protestant city. Consequently Welsh's labours in the preaching of the Gospel must have been in a great measure obstructed, especially as the government of the city was in the hands of Father Arnoux and Cardinal Richelieu, both despots and Romanists. These circumstances, and the weak state of his health, resulting from his imprisonment in Blackness Castle, and the labours and privations of his exile, brought upon him the infirmities attendant on old age, though he was but a little beyond his mid-life. His physician advised, as the only hope of recovery, his return to Scotland, so that he might breathe his native air. As he could not do this without permission from the king, he earnestly besought him, entreating for liberty of access to his native land. His request met with a peremptory refusal, but the king said that if he chose he might come to London 'to be dealt with.' On his arrival there the Dean of Winchester, by the king's command, waited on him and had a conference with him. He endeavoured to extort from him a general approval, however superficial, of the government of the Church, in order to satisfy the king; but Welsh made an open and honest confession of the truth without reserve, and retracted not a hair's-breadth. The Dean reported the result of the interview to the king, and Welsh was, of course, denied the liberty he so earnestly desired and so much needed. Intercession was made for him by relatives of his wife, who were of the Court party, or not inimical to it, but James turned a deaf ear to their entreaties. The last appeal was made by Mrs. Welsh herself, who succeeded in obtaining an interview with his majesty, when the following remarkable colloquy took place. The king asked who was her father. 'John Knox' was the reply. 'Knox and Welsh!' exclaimed the king; 'the devil never made sic a match as that.' 'It's right like, sir,' she said, 'for we never speered [asked] his advice.' His majesty next inquired how many children her father had left, and if they were lads or lasses. 'Three,' she said, 'and they are all lasses.' 'God be thanked,' cried James, lifting up both his hands; 'for if they had been three lads, I had never buiked [enjoyed] my three kingdoms in peace.' She urged him to give her husband his native air. 'Give him his native air!' the king exclaimed; 'give him the devil!' 'Give that to your hungry courtiers,' she indignantly rejoined. The king at last told her that, if she would persuade her husband to submit to the bishops, he would grant her request. Lifting up her apron and holding it towards his majesty, she heroically said, 'Please your majesty, I'd rather kep [receive] his head there!'¹

All hope of Welsh's being allowed to return to Scotland being finally abandoned, his friends at Court craved permission for him to preach in London. Even this was at first refused, but afterwards granted, when James was told privately that Welsh's life was in imminent danger. He at once availed himself of the liberty thus allowed, and preached what proved to be his last sermon. It was long, and delivered with fervour, but the effort proved too much for his sinking frame, worn out by a life of toil and many privations. He returned to his lodgings and died two hours afterwards, in the fifty-third year of his age! He was buried on 4th April 1622, within the parish of St. Botolph, Bishopsgate, London. His wife survived him nearly three years, and died at Ayr in January 1625. Of their marriage there were three sons, viz.—William, Mr. Josias, Nathaniel, and two daughters. The younger daughter was called Louise; the name of the other is unknown. The elder daughter died at Jonsac in September 1614. Louise was alive in 1625, as her name appears in her mother's testament of that date, made when she was dying: no trace of her appears afterwards. Of the sons, William, the oldest, married, but was accidentally killed in the Netherlands, where he had gone to practise as a physician. A daughter survived him, named Margaret, and she dying, her uncle Josias was served her heir. Josias, who was educated at Geneva and Glasgow, was appointed to the Professorship of Humanity in Glasgow University, but, for his steadfast adherence to Presbyterian polity, he was deprived of that post by the intolerance of the prelates. He afterwards became minister at Templepatrick in Ireland, and died in 1634. He had many of his father's gifts and graces. His son, Mr. John, became minister of Irongray, from which he was ejected in 1662 for nonconformity. He has been described as 'a godly, meek, humble man, and a good popular preacher.' After the battle of Bothwell Brig he went to London, where he died in 1679, in the fifty-fourth year of his age, and twenty-eighth of his ministry. He breathed his last in the house of the widow of Mr. Alexander Carmichael, who was minister of the earliest Scottish Church in London.¹ His funeral was the largest ever seen in London, and was attended by a vast number of ministers and persons high in rank. He was buried in his grandfather's grave in Bishopsgate. Nathaniel, the third son, died in early manhood. His end was very distressing. He was shipwrecked; the ship sinking, he swam to a desolate rock, but only to die of starvation. His body when found was in the attitude of prayer, on bended knee with outstretched hands!²

It is doubtful if any lineal descendants of the Reformer's three daughters exist. His second wife, within two years after his death, married Andrew Ker of Faldonsyde. She died about 1612. Her son, Mr. John, became minister of Preston or Saltpreston (Prestonpans) in 1605—'An ornament and blessing to the Church in troublous times.'²

The following is the genealogy of William Knox, elder son of the laird of Gifford, and brother of the Reformer. He was a merchant in Preston, and had a son named William, who was the first Protestant minister of Cockpen (1567-1592). He had three sons—

(1) Mr. John, the eldest, who was minister of Lauder (1576-1582), afterwards of Melrose (1584-1623). Livingston characterises him 'as eminent for gifts, grace, faithfulness, and success.' He gave the Archbishop of St. Andrews a gentle admonition for the doctrine he set forth at the opening of the Assembly in 1617; and the following year, when the Synod urged obedience to the Articles of Perth, he, when preaching before his brethren in Synod assembled, exhorted them, with tears, to adhere to the constitution and privileges of the Church as established previous to the appointment of bishops. He died in 1623 in his sixty-eighth year.¹

(2) Mr. William, his successor in Cockpen (1592-1623), who died in his fifty-fourth year.²

(3) Mr. James, who was elected one of the regents of the University of Edinburgh in 1598, was minister of Kelso (1605-1633), and died in his fifty-eighth year. He married Martha Borthwick. Issue—three sons and five daughters—

(1) Robert; (2) Alexander; (3) William;

(1) Martha; (2) Elizabeth; (3) Rachel; (4) Jeane; and (5) Joane.

Mr. Robert succeeded him in Kelso (1633-1658). He preached before Parliament in August, and before his majesty in September 1641, but suffered a long imprisonment in 1654 for remembering the king in prayer. He died in his fifty-second year.³ He married in 1638 Margaret, sister of John Ker of Lochtour; and secondly, in 1643, Elizabeth, second daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, and by her had two sons and one daughter,

(1) Robert; (2) John; (1) Joane.

Sir John obtained an Act of Parliament in 1661 conferring the vacant stipend on his widow and children, in consideration of his sufferings and loyalty, which the heritors willingly paid.

Of these three sons in their order conforming to their progeny, and first, Mr. William, second minister of Cockpen, had six sons, viz., three by a daughter of Rig of Carberry, in Midlothian, the eldest of whom was—

1. Mr. John, minister of Carrington (1619-1661). He married Issobell Douglas, who died in November 1664. His son, John, was his colleague and successor (1653-1659),¹ and died without issue.

The next was—

2. William, bookbinder in Edinburgh; and
3. Nicol, bailie of Cranston M'Gill, and chamberlain to the Lords Cranston. He had no male issue.

William, the bookbinder, had three sons—

1. Mr. James, minister of Bowden (1662-1680); he married, but left no male issue. He had a daughter who died in childhood.
2. Robert, writer in Edinburgh, had a son, Mr. James, minister of Dunino in Fife (1697-1740), who married, on 24th April 1700, Margaret Woddrop, and had issue—William, a preacher of the Gospel, and ten daughters—

(1) Helen; (2) Margaret (died 1783); (3) Christian; (4) Anna; (5) Jannet; (6) Helen; (7) Jean; (8) Magdalen; (9) Christian; and (10) Elizabeth, who married, in 1745, Robert West, 'in the parish of Dundee.'²

3. Mr. Henry, who succeeded his brother James as minister of Bowden (1681-1689), was previously in Dunscore (16). In 1689 he was ejected for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, not praying for William and Mary, and for declaring his preference that the Papists should have the ascendancy rather than the Presbyterians. He became burgess and guild brother of Edinburgh in 1678, and died there in 1716 in his seventy-sixth year.³ He had a son minister of the island of St. Christopher in the West Indies.

William (secundus) of Cockpen married (secondly) Elizabeth Hallyburton, daughter of the laird of Muirhouse-law, in Teviotdale, and had by her also three sons, viz.—

(1) Andrew ; (2) Patrick ; and (3) Simon.

The first died a preacher when residing in the family of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. Patrick was secretary to the Earl of Craven, Ambassador Extraordinary from England to Holland, and was recommended by the Earl to the States of Zealand, as factor for their East Indian possessions. Having no issue, he left his means, which were ample, to his brother, Mr. Simon, who was minister of Girthon, in Galloway (1666, continued to 29th October 1667). Simon married Isabel, daughter of Mr. Robert Davidsons, minister of Stenton, in East Lothian (1641-1657).¹ By her mother, Catherine Ramsay, she was niece to Ramsay, Earl of Holderness, in England, a cadet of the family of Dalhousie, page to the king, and who was the means of saving the life of his majesty on the occasion of the Gowrie Conspiracy. Simon had but one child, William, who was minister of Dairsie, in Fife (1704-1746). He was in a collateral line cousin-german to James of Bowden ; Robert, the writer ; and Henry of Bowden, and great-great-grand-nephew to John, the Reformer, and the fourth minister from father to son in a direct line from the period of the Reformation. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Bethune of Blebo, in Fife.² She died 22nd December 1763, and he had by her eight sons and five daughters—

i. John ; ii. John ; iii. Henry ; iv. James ; v. William ; vi. George ;
vii. Robert ; and viii. David.

i. Allison ; ii. Christian ; iii. Elizabeth ; iv. Margaret ; and v. Elizabeth.

Margaret married Henry Broughton of the Excise in 1750. Issue—

(1) Thomas, born at Dunbar in 1752 ; (2) Brian, born at Stirling in 1759.

There were also—

(3) Edward Swift ; and (4) Robert.³

Their mother died at Edinburgh in 1810.⁴ Edward Swift became Major-
