PHILADELPHIA:
JOSEPH D. MCKEE.
1892.

Yours sincerely
Geo. Y. McKee

The history of the McKees had been for years a subject of study by the author of this book. His manuscript was nearly finished, and he had written to several persons that he hoped soon to have the volume published, when suddenly the Author of Life said of his earthly labor, "It is finished."

From the time he divided the first honor of his class at Jefferson College in 1856, until his death of pneumonia, December 24th, 1891, all his life was spent in teaching. His continuous connection with the Pennsylvania State College for twenty-five years, in times of prosperity and adversity, bears silent testimony to his sterling qualities. His retiring disposition led him more than once to refuse the offered Presidency of the Pennsylvania State College, yet again and again he took the helm as Acting-President, safely steering the institution through the thickest darkness of its history until day began to break again and another pilot could be secured.

He was an accomplished scholar in literature and the dead languages, a fine mathematician, thorough in everything, always willing and ready to help, steadfastly doing the right, and an earnest Christian worker, for several years before his death being an elder in the Presbyterian church.

Preface.

“Why?” and “How?” are questions that, in many cases, are not readily answered. A growth begins, seemingly by chance, and, as days and years go by, the growing thing that was shapeless at first takes definite form, and perhaps gives sufficient proof of its right to be. About twenty-seven years ago, the eager questioning of a once-seen but never-forgotten relative, Joseph G. McKee (622), occasioned my making a schedule on a leaf torn from a pocket-diary. The attempt to make a clear statement of facts imperfectly known showed the inadequacy of my knowledge and caused efforts to increase it; and so, ten years later, a new attempt produced a schedule less incomplete than the former, though some important parts were still lacking. Repeated efforts were made to find a family record which Joseph G. McKee had made while on his visit to Ireland a few months after his first suggestion of the “tree”; but neither at his father-in-law’s nor with his brother James P. could any trace of it be found. One and another, however, in Ireland and in America, contributed facts and hints as to where facts might be found, till that which seemed only a stump, a trunk with a few stubby branches, became a well-developed tree whose every branch is spreading vigorously and symmetrically.

Very recently a large amount of information has come to hand which, with that previously gathered, has made it possible to give a short sketch of the early McKees with some few points on their common origin. Although imperfect, it is hoped that it will prove of interest and will serve to stimulate others to continue to search for, and, having found, to record all points of interest, anecdotes and the like relating to any of the McKees.

The rest of this little volume considers only the descendants of David McKee and Rebecca Irvine (or Irwin, or Erwin), who married about 1755, and lived in the parish of Anahilt, near Hillsborough, County Down; and its information is more complete respecting the American branches of the family. Nearly all immigrants came first to Pennsylvania, either to Cumberland county or to Pittsburgh; but, although three out of the four families coming in the first generation have descendants owning the farms where they settled, and all the nine branches have representatives in that State, many clansmen have passed westward, and they are now to be found in about twenty States of the Union. Their Presbyterianism has not suffered by crossing the ocean, as nearly all are members or adherents of some Presbyterian body; many of the psalm-singing U. P. Church, to which they have furnished ministers and ruling elders enough to make three or four Presbyteries. Indeed, in one family, since its settlement here in 1794, three persons—father, son, and grandson—have exercised the office of ruling elder in the same congregation for an aggregate of 103 years, the son becoming in every case a member of the session before his father ceased to serve, and the surviving member having yet a prospect of many years' usefulness.

Not office-seekers, they have been law-makers in several States, and have served on the judicial bench and in other positions of honor and trust. Taking to law and to medicine less freely than to theology, they give some to the ranks of each; while the pedagogue's chair is frequently, and the editor's chair occasionally, occupied by them. Not wealthy in any instance, they are ordinarily so situated as to have most "creature comforts" of life, including opportunities for getting an education.

Had the persons here recorded been less diffident, and spoken more freely of themselves and their work, this sketch would have been much more interesting and complete; but they all, with one consent, avoided giving anything like a personal history. Wherever, therefore, any detailed account is presented of a man's work, the information has been obtained from some outside source, and, for errors of statement, the principal is accountable to this extent only, —he ought to have given the exact facts, and so left no chance for mistake on the part of the editor. Undoubtedly, many of those here named, in official or unofficial position, rendered to their several communities valuable services, the record of which should not be lost. But these things are not reported, and the narrative thus becomes a negative one, whose substance may be given approximately in the words of a correspondent: "I have never heard of a drunkard or a thief in the tribe. Honest in the sight of all men, performing duties wherever trusted, they have been obedient to law, and useful citizens."

The purpose of this brief outline, which is neither history nor biography, and yet seeks to be more than a directory, is to make each living member of the tribe know something more of his kindred, who they are, and where they may be found, and to enable and encourage each one, when traveling, to seek out his relatives. He will find them to be persons of whom he need not be ashamed, intelligent and useful citizens, with enough of old-time hospitality and feeling of kinship to give him a hearty welcome.

For many facts and anecdotes relating to the early McKee history, I am indebted to Mr. John McKee, of 30 East Thirty-ninth street, New York City; for the presentation of certain branches, to the care of J. M. Pollock (232), Miss J. McCulloch (469), T. W. McKee (624), W. J. Wallace (712), Mrs. E. M. Patterson (725), Matthew Clarke (731), Mrs. I. J. Owens (7432), and others; for old letters, which often corrected erroneous views and suggested right ones, to Miss McCulloch already named, Mrs. Susan Scott (128), and especially to George McKee (111); for sketches of single families, to those named above and others, without whose help the present partial success could not have been reached. Originating in a casual remark and followed without definite purpose, the inquiry has given me much pleasure through the acquaintances thus formed, and as it has brought together information that may be interesting to others of the kin, Joseph D. McKee (431) has given new proof of his good will to all members of the clan by having it printed for their service. To him, as publisher, all his grateful kinsmen should send their hearty thanks; all complaints respecting errors, with corrections of the same, and additional information concerning the tribe should be sent to the compiler, whose record number is

I trust that my father's request will bring a response from very many McKees and McKee descendants, bearing corrections for all misstatements and giving dates, addresses, and other information to fill in all the blanks of this volume. Especially important, and interesting too, will be all information as to the origin and history of other branches of the McKees, leading to a fuller knowledge of our common origin, and some day, perhaps, to a more extended work.

If full and frequent reports are sent in, I may, from time to time, issue a circular making the new information general; in any case I shall be very glad to receive letters from any of the tribe, and to answer such questions as I am able.

Sketch of the Early McKees.

THERE has been much speculation as to how the name McKee was originally spelled. Many have argued that McKee, McKay, McKie, MacIye, Magee, McHugh, McDonald, and others, are only different spellings of the same name. We can find no connecting links, but it seems both possible and probable that such is the case.

The first real knowledge we have of the McKees dates from over two hundred years ago, when four brothers bearing that name left Scotland for bonnie England. There they soon joined the army of William, Prince of Orange, and shortly afterwards, in 1690, we find them, with the rest of the army, in the northern part of Ireland. We have been unable to learn the Christian names of these four brothers. All we know of one is that he returned with William's army to England, where we lose all trace of him. Three were induced to remain in Ireland by grants of land for services rendered. One married and settled in County Antrim; but even tradition has no further information for us concerning either himself or his descendants, although from actual knowledge in our possession concerning the other two brothers and their descendants, it seems almost a certainty that he and his family emigrated during the exodus from Ulster to America, about 1735, and were the progenitors of the McKees in Kentucky and Virginia, whose history has been written by George Wilson McKee, Major of Ordnance, U. S. A. Another settled in the Ards, in Northeastern County Down, where he has had numerous descendants until this day.

The fourth settled in Lisban, near Saintfield, County Down, with a fellow-soldier named Edgar, both of whom have many descendants in the neighborhood still, who have inter-married for several generations. This soldier-pioneer, whose name was probably Hugh, had settled, built his house, married, and possibly had some children born to him before the year 1700. On the Lisban road, going from Lough Henney to Saintfield, about half a mile after crossing the Belfast road, your attention will be attracted towards the right by an ivy-covered gable, which is all that remains standing of the original Edgar house. If you should go about a quarter of a mile farther on towards Saintfield, and turn to the left where the road from Tonaghmore to Carricknaveagh crosses the Lisban road, you will see the remains of the old McKee house, about a hundred feet from the crossroads, and on the left-hand side. The front wall is still standing, and is used as a fence between the road and the field. You are now on land once granted by the Crown to the pioneer for his services in the cause of the Protestant succession. If you are a "Logstown McKee," or a descendant of David McKee, —the subject of this book—or of Hugh or John, his brothers, you must feel an interest in this spot. Two centuries ago your ancestor was living within these walls. Two centuries ago he had beaten his sword into a plowshare, and was laboring to put the land about you in its present state of beauty.

The patent which accompanied the grant, with its crest and motto, is now beyond our reach, having been recalled by the Marquis of Downshire, the lord of the soil, at the expiration of some stipulated period or life, or after the passage of some land act increasing the powers of the landlord, of which there were forty-four. The pioneer's grandson, Hugh McKee, of Poagsburn, became a successful linen merchant in the latter part of the eighteenth century, and acquired from Lord Donegal the privilege of erecting a stone in the old linen market in Donegal street, Belfast, on which to buy and sell linen. This necessitated his having a stamp for marking the linen thus purchased or sold, and so he had one made from the original crest on the patent, using however the English translation of the motto. This stamp was lost, but his son John, who was killed in 1812, was one of the few men in that neighborhood to get a watch, and with it he got a seal with the family crest; both of which are now in the possession of his grandnephew, Mr. David McKee, Oughley, Saintfield, County Down, Ireland.

This is as close an approximation to the original as we can make from the seal, which differs only in having the motto "TURN IT NOT AGAINST ME."

As to the pioneer's wife and as to the number of his children we know nothing, although in all probability he had a large family. There are, however, only four of whom we have any definite knowledge.

The oldest of these was probably James, who settled about a mile from the old homestead, in Tullywest, near where the national school-house now stands. Tradition affirms that he was the father of twenty children, and that he lived to be one hundred and twenty years old. This may or may not be true, but we feel reasonably certain that the McKee pioneers of western Pennsylvania were his children and grandchildren. Out of the alleged twenty we have positive knowledge of only four. Of these the one most prominent in local history was David, who got a grant of land from the Marquis of Downshire in the townland of Carricknaveagh, on which he built a house known as Moor Hall "on the south side of the Lisburn road about two minutes' walk from the Temple toward Lisburn." He was known to fame as "Big Davie of the Temple." He dealt in cattle, going up the country and buying a drove which he would take to Scotland and sell.

Big Davie and his May-pole were known and respected in every cattle market in the north of Ireland. His encounters were more numerous than those of Con of the Hundred Battles or of Little John and his crab-tree, and yet they all, without a single exception, ended in a way favorable to himself. When still quite a young man his reputation was such that no one was willing to meet him in a pugilistic encounter. Upon receiving a challenge to fight a man with a shillalah, the Irish national weapon, he immediately began the practice of that arm, and was soon able to overcome his challenger. Ever afterwards he carried his stick with him.

His children were James, John, Hugh, Richard, and a daughter who married a Mr. Monroe. His great grandson David McKee is now the proprietor of Moor Hall and has a large family of sons. Address: Temple, County Down.

Another son of James McKee, of Tullywest, was Hugh, who got a farm in the townland of Crevytenant, about a mile from his father's towards Ballynahinch, where his great grandson Hugh McKee, who had married a Miss Gill, died childless about the year 1880, and the farm passed out of the family name.

Still another son of James, of Tullywest, was John, who, though raised on the farm, lived a large part of his earlier and middle life in Saintfield as proprietor of the "Price's Arms," a hotel which then was, as it is even yet, the largest and best public house in that section. While living here John McKee was an active Free Mason—at one time Master of Saintfield Lodge—and of convivial habits, as his son James, late in his life, declared that certain resolutions, including one against secret societies, dated back to his early experience of his father's condition when he returned from the lodge. It may be mentioned as illustrative of John McKee's force of character, that he gave up the hotel, resumed his farm life, and cut himself off entirely from all undesirable associates and habits belonging to his hotel life, scarcely ever going down to the village though only about a mile distant. After his return to the farm he had stated, perhaps annual, dinners for his descendants, and these reunion dinners were part of the recollections of his grandchildren to their latest days.

He was twice married. His first family consisted of James, Lucretia (Mrs. Scott), Betty (Mrs. Gibson), Mary (Mrs. Thompson), and several other daughters. Of the second family nothing is known; tradition says it consisted of seven daughters.

His son James married Betty Young and settled on a farm under Mr. Price, about a mile from Saintfield, on the Belfast and Downpatrick road, in 1790; engaged in the Rebellion of 1798, and had his house searched for arms, although the Government failed to find them. He was an active and enthusiastic worker in the organization and erection, in 1797, of the Second Saintfield Church, being one of its first elders, and occupying a double pew which he put up in the northwest corner. His son, Thomas Walker McKee, was the first male child baptized in the new church by the newly ordained clergyman, Rev. Thomas Walker. When he was leaving for America, in 1812, James gave his double pew to his second cousin James McKee, of the Oughley, who, with his first cousin Robert McKee, of Killynure, was a ruling elder in that church for over forty years, and whose descendants are active members of the church yet. On arriving in America with his family of two boys and five girls he settled in Beaver County, Pennsylvania, where his descendants are known as the "Logstown McKees." He brought with him his grandfather's silver-headed cane, on which is engraved "James McKee, Tullywest, 1760," probably the date either of presentation or of purchase. This he left to his son Thomas Walker McKee, whose grandson, Mr. James L. McKee, Richland Center, Wis., now possesses in lineal succession this family relic, being the great great great grandson of James, of Tullywest.

Of Jane, the only daughter of James, of Tullywest, of whom we know anything, we have a relic also—a sampler which she gave to her grandniece Mary McKee McCune, and which is now owned by Miss Eliza McCune, of Woodlawn, Beaver County, Pa. The sampler bears her name and its date thus: "Jane McKee, her sampler, ended April, 1761." From the date it is probable that Jane was one of the youngest children. She married a Mr. Oliphant, who was a stucco worker in Belfast, where he acquired a comfortable fortune, but had no family. When he gave up work he left the city and occupied a house on the farm of James McKee, his wife's nephew. Both husband and wife seem to have been most lovable in character and disposition, and they thus overcame the prejudice which existed against him as being a Scotchman and as only a hand-worker, while the McKees were farmers. When James built or repaired (?) his house, "Uncle Oliphant" offered his services as a plasterer and, by the loving exercise of his art, so beautified the house as to make it superior in appearance to any other of its class in that community. The Oliphant cottage also and its surroundings were made so beautiful as to be an Eden, a "joy forever" in the memory of the McKee children.

Another son of the pioneer, Hugh McKee, got a large tract of land under Squire Price, of Saintfield, in the townland of Craigy, running from the Lisburn road west, on both sides of the Craigy road, where he had several sons and daughters.

RUINS OF THE ORIGINAL, EDGAR HOUSE.

He divided his farm between his sons John, James and Hugh, giving John the western portion with its outlet on the Lisburn road, James the southern part on both sides of the Craigy road, and Hugh what was the northern part on both sides of the road, with what was probably the old homestead.

Hugh was engaged to be married to a girl in the Ards. He went on the day appointed to the tavern where, according to Scotch fashion, the marriage was to take place. The clergyman, bridesmaid, and all were there except the bride. After what seemed an endless wait, and everyone had given up hopes of the bride's appearance, Hugh, deeply chagrined and disappointed, turned to the bridesmaid with the question, "Will you have me, then?" She consented, and the ceremony was immediately performed. The last word had scarcely been spoken, when the intended bride came galloping up to the door on horseback, having been delayed by her dressmaker. On learning the turn which matters had taken, she violently upbraided her friend and bridesmaid, and left, telling her that some judgment would fall on her for what she had done.

The bride and groom came home to Craigy where they were blessed with worldly success. Five sons and three daughters had grown up to manhood and womanhood when the Rebellion of 1798 occurred.

McKee was a loyalist, and consequently unpopular with his neighbors, who were all "crappies." His house was attacked, and the threat of the disappointed bride was fearfully realized. Upon his refusal to join the insurgents they organized an assault on the house. The storming party is variously estimated at from ten to thirty thousand people. They attacked the house about noon; McKee, with his sons and daughters resisted, and held them at bay for some time, the women loading, the men firing, until the enemy succeeded in putting a torch to the store of flax on the second floor. Then their choice was either death from the infuriated mob without, or death from the fire within. And so they continued firing, pausing only for a moment, now and then, to throw some milk, the only liquid available, on their heads and clothes. The shots gradually became more and more infrequent, and finally ceased sometime before the slated roof fell in. An hour or two later the "crappies" carried the charred remains into the field across the road, and laid them side by side in a hole which they had dug. Over the grave they raised a cairn of stones, which remains to this day. The same house with a thatched roof is now occupied by Mr. Hugh Dales and family, who have also the farm.

John, James, and perhaps other children of Hugh of Craigy have numerous descendants in that vicinity yet. Many of them, however, emigrated to America, where they are to be found in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and Peterborough, Ontario.

David McKee was probably the third son of the pioneer. As his life and that of his descendants is the subject of the following pages, nothing will be said here except that he married Rebecca Irvine, settled in Anahilt, and had six sons and three daughters, who grew up, married, and have descendants living to-day.

The only other son of the old pioneer of whom we know anything was John, who inherited the old farm at Lisban. It is not known whom he married, but he left a large family behind him.

His son James inherited the farm, where his descendants lived until the year 1860.

His second son John settled in Killynure, about three miles from Saintfield, toward Belfast, on the Belfast road, on ground owned by Mr. Price, where his descendants lived until about 1865, when the last one, Robert McKee, sold it.

A third son of John, of Lisban, was Hugh, who purchased Poagsburn farm about 1760, where he raised a large family. He was better known as "Linen Hughie," as he was a linen merchant in Belfast, where he owned a stone in the old market. His oldest son was Robert, who saw the stone erected; another was John, whose watch and seal still exist. Still another son was the celebrated Rev. David McKee, who preached at Annaghlonge, for over sixty years. The sons of the latter all died unmarried, except David, who was Rev. Dr. John Hall's successor in Dublin when he left for Fifth Avenue, New York, and who went to New Zealand for his health a few years since, and died two years later. His family are still at Raccerton, Christ's Church, New Zealand. The Poagsburn farm is now occupied by Linen Hughie's grandson, Robert McKee.

All we know of the other son of John, of Lisban, is that his name was David, and that the Rev. David McKee, of Annaghlonge, was his namesake.

Margaret, the daughter of John, of Lisban, married a farmer named Edgar. He seems to have been a fine carpenter as well, for at the time of his brother-in-law Hugh McKee's marriage, he made for him a chest of drawers, which are still in Poagsburn house, and used as the safe deposit of the family. One of Margaret's sons became the celebrated Rev. Samuel Edgar, D.D., LL.D., of Ballynahinch, and Professor of Divinity for the Secession Synod. He married his first cousin, Elizabeth McKee, of Poagsburn. Two of his sons became clergymen; David as his father's successor in Ballynahinch for fifty years, and John as a minister in Belfast, where he was Professor of Systematic Theology for the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of Ireland.

From Mr. John McKee, of 30 E. Thirty-ninth street, New York, we learn that most of the McKees, and nearly all of the Edgars, of County Down bury at Lough Henney graveyard. The bodies of James, of Tullywest; John, of Lisban, and all of their descendants who had spent their lives in that locality are there interred.

Mr. McKee writes: The graveyard is situated on an eminence overlooking the lake, surrounded by large firs, which sigh mournfully when fanned by the breeze from the water. It is certainly a very old burying ground. There is no church at it or near it, but tradition says the ruins of some building were once visible. Here rest the remains of James Davidson, the subject of Dr. Edgar's most popular publication, "Jamy, a True Story," to whose memory a tablet has been raised.

Opposite the graveyard, out in the water and in what was once the centre of the lake before it was drained, rises up a little island known in the neighborhood as Robbin Wright's Island. It covers almost half an acre and is a perfect circle. Robbin owned it and took a great deal of pleasure in working on it. It is not natural but artificial, but when or by whom made even tradition fails to offer a hint. One day while Robbin was working on the north side of the island he struck a tomb in which lay the remains of some Irish king or chieftain (who in life must have stood about eight feet high) clad in a coat of mail, made out of small rings, which Robbin presented to the Belfast museum and which is there to be seen.

It is known that Irish wolves visited the cemeteries and disinterred the dead, and the supposition is that this island was made for a royal burying ground while the rest of the clan buried on the eminence overlooking the island, where Lough Henney graveyard now stands. This may be true or otherwise, but one thing is certain, that nobody bearing the name of McKee or Edgar can walk over Lough Henney graveyard without treading on the dust of his relatives or ancestors.

NOTE.—As is hinted by the use of number groups in the preface, a systematic numerical notation has been adopted, to secure convenient reference, and to avoid errors in identifying those whose names are similar; though, for sake of simplicity, these record numbers are entered in the case of adults only. The following rules outline the method used: As in many families, only the relative age of the boys and the relative age of the girls can be learned, number the former and then the latter in the order of birth. Where a family counts ten children, use a zero (0) to mark the tenth. In each successive generation, affix the child's record number to that of the parent. To represent a person who is a member of the family by marriage only, attach an accent mark (') to the record number of the husband or the wife.

For example, (504') (read five, naught, four, prime) must, under these rules, denote one who is related to the fifth branch, in its tenth family, by marriage to one whose place in that family is the fourth; and a moment's reference to the register will give the name of the person meant.

The founder of the family sketched herein, David McKee, left to inquiring descendants of these later days no record of dates relating to his birth, marriage or death. His marriage to Rebecca Irvine, would seem to have taken place about the year A. D. 1755, and the remaining forty years or so of his life were spent as a thrifty leasehold farmer on a farm about three miles south of Hillsborough, County Down. His two oldest sons in due time took farms in the townland of Drumlough, the fourth, fifth and sixth in that of Magheraconluce, his two older daughters settled close by and the third, though unusually distant, was only twenty miles away. Thus, in the early part of his last decade, all things foretold to Mr. McKee that, for generations to come, his family would continue to be peaceful citizens of the old neighborhood; and yet, ere ten years had gone by, two of his children had voluntarily migrated to the United States, two more, having engaged in open rebellion, had suffered confiscation of all their goods and gone into voluntary exile, and the house that for forty years was his home had been burned as a manufactory of arms for the rebels. In '93, his son-in-law, John Wallace, on his arrival in America, addressed Mr. McKee a letter with an account of their experiences on the trip. It would seem that, at the time of the "Rebellion of '98," Mr. McKee had died and his sons Joseph (bachelor) and George (recently married) were living in the old home. Tradition tells that when the house was burnt and Mrs. McKee stood watching the destruction of her home, the commander of the royal troops, probably revolting in heart against his work of vandalism, bade her go in and take out whatever she wanted to preserve. Acknowledging the courtesy, she entered the house and soon returned with the family Bible, the only valuable she was willing to receive from those she thought her oppressors.

Some time later the ruins were re-roofed, and a number of the old bog oak beams which had partially escaped the fire were used in the repairs, and are still to be seen in the house, which is now occupied by Mrs. Spence and her family, and of which it is hoped the engraving on the opposite page will be of interest.

Of Mrs. McKee's later life but little is known; her son James, in 1802, writes of her as "in her usual health," adding "I think she is a little on the decline;" and a John McNeill, in 1816, having taken dinner with her at her son William's, declares that she is "surprisingly stout and cheerful." McNeill goes on to say: "She told me over several curious little jokes that took place when she was a girl." After this date there is no known record concerning her. Nothing is known also of the birth-dates of her children; but Elizabeth was one of the oldest, and probably all the daughters were older than George (5), who is believed to have been born in 1776.

Children:—James (1), William (2), David (3), Joseph (4), George (5), John (6), Elizabeth (7) (Mrs. John Wallace), Martha (8) (Mrs. Michael McGowan), Rebecca (9) (Mrs. Wm. Haslit).

JANE McGOWAN

(1) was a farmer in the townland of Drumlough, but was also a wheelwright, and this term is used distinctively on a letter addressed to him by his brother David. He and his wife "Jinney" join in a letter of August 7, 1802, to his brother George, and he was still living in 1816.

His brother David's letters to him in 1802 and '03 imply that he was in easy circumstances, and his own letter to George shows him to be an earnest, intelligent, Christian man, wide-awake in affairs of both Church and State.

Children.—David M. (11), Jane (12).

DAVID M. McKEE (11) (born March '98, died July 24, '41), married MARY ANN COLTER.

(11) was a farmer, and probably was trained as a wheelwright by his father, for letters speak of his having such a knowledge of tools as Irish farmers did not usually have. His letter dated "Pittsburgh, November 30, '39," says that he and his son George left Belfast September 13, '38; sailed from Liverpool September 15, in the second cabin of a packet called the Shakespeare; reached New York October 24; took the steamboat at 10 A. M., October 27, for Philadelphia, where they arrived in the evening; stopped there over night, and started in the morning of the 28th for Pittsburgh, taking what was known as the "Express Perseverance" line, on the "Northern route." They left about 8 A. M. on the steam-coach, which took them about one hundred miles to a town called Bordentown, then went by canal boat more than one hundred miles to a town called Huntington (Huntingdon), and then took the stage-coach right to Pittsburgh, better than another one hundred miles. This route they went without stopping either day or night, and arrived on the 31st, about 4 o'clock in the evening, Hallowe'en. (David's itinerary shows that the "Express" of '39, made up in nearly equal parts of railway, canal and stage-route, required eighty hours for the trip from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, which the modern express-train makes in ten.) After visiting his uncles George (5) and David (3), he made his home with the former, already an invalid, until his death, about a year later. Afterwards he farmed for his uncle's widow till April, '41, when he removed to Pittsburgh, where he died shortly of dysentery. David is recalled by his Pennsylvania friends as an unusually bright, jovial man.

Child.—George (111).

GEORGE McKEE (111), (born April 17, '19); married, January 1, '45, RUTH CONNOR (126) (died September 14, '54); also in autumn of '56. Mrs. MARY T. M. METZGAR (née McM ah (died December, '69); and subsequently Mrs. ANDERSON.

Arriving in Pittsburgh with his father October 31, '38, he began work November 2, at $1 per day. He soon after entered on his apprenticeship as a carpenter. MARY ANN McKEE (47) (born April 6, '12, died August 4, '81).

She lived at Big Spring until her mother's death, in '66; then with her brother Joseph's children in Springfield until they married; and during the rest of her life with Mrs. Emily Myers (454).

GEORGE McKEE (5) (born about 1776, died October 9, '39), married, probably in '97, MARGARET BALL (who died September 9, '25), and April 10, '29, DEBORAH McKEE (born January 5, '92, died February 7, '87).

He began as a farmer in Magheraconluce, but engaged soon after in the Rebellion of '98, in which, tradition says, he was an officer. The revolt being quickly put down with but a single skirmish in that district—the fight at Ballynahinch—he was in concealment for some months, most of the time in Scotland, after which he escaped to the United States with his brother Joseph, suffering the confiscation of his farm. Arriving in Newville, Pa., November 1, '98, he remained there during that winter in a house belonging to his brother David, and in that town his first child was born. Probably in the spring of '99 he removed to western Pennsylvania, and on March 7, 1800, he bought, in Fayette township, Allegheny County, a farm of nearly 400 acres, on which he spent the remainder of his life. He acquired citizenship September 25, '05, and was an elder in the "Union" Associate Reformed Church. He is described as tall, dignified, and the most graceful and sure-seated rider in the community. His first wife was born in the same neighborhood with her husband, and her mother and sister still lived there in '02; his second wife, a granddaughter of his full cousin, John McKee of Price's Arms, was born and reared about a mile from Saintfield, "on the Belfast and Downpatrick road." She came to the United States in '12, with the family of her father James McKee, who settled near Logstown, Beaver County, Pa. (See general sketch.)

Children:—David (51), William (52) (born October —, '00, died January 14, '21), John (53) (born May 4, '02, killed by a cow February 18, '15), George Young (54), James Y. (55), Mary (56), Rebecca (57), Margaret, "Peggie," (58), Jane (59), Elizabeth Wallace, "Eliza," (50). (Of these children, (54) and (55) belong to the second family.)

DAVID McKEE (51) (born November 10, '98, died February 29, '72), married December 30, '23, MARY ("POLLY") EWING (born July 13, '02).

David McKee, an upright, hard-working farmer, spent the last seventy years of his life on a part of the farm which his father purchased in 1800. His widow survives him and now makes her home with her youngest son in Pittsburgh.

Children:—William (511), Samuel Ewing (512), George S. (513), David Wallace (514), Margaret Jane (515), Lettie (516), Emma Brown (517), Adelaide Victoria (518), Anna Mary (519).

WILLIAM McKEE (511) (born September 26, '24), married August 15, '51, MARGARET BLACK.

William McKee, a farmer with his father until '51, left the country after his marriage, and has since that time lived in Pittsburgh and Allegheny City. His present home is 38 Boyle street, Allegheny.

GEORGE YOUNG McKEE (54) (born April 30, '31), married May 4, '52, ELIZABETH AGNES JOHNSON (born July 23, '32).

An active business man, he was in public life as a member of the legislature for three sessions, 1865-7, and county commissioner for three terms, January, '82, to December, '90. The burning of the court house during his first term as commissioner threw upon him and his colleagues the responsibility for the new public buildings, which, erected at a cost of nearly $2,500,000, are not only a monument to the skill of the architect, but an enduring testimonial to the sound judgment, integrity and business capacity of the commissioners. Mr. McKee made his home on the ancestral farm until '91, when he sold and moved to Pittsburgh. His new home is 5454 Stanton avenue, E.E., Pittsburgh.

Children:—Charles Horace (541), Louie Clara (542).

CHARLES HORACE McKEE (541) (born April 21, '54).

JOSEPH G. McKEE (622) (born ———, '32, died September 25, '68), married ———, '65, ADA ARBUTHNOT.

He came to the United States in '50, in the "Standard;" was wrecked near Newfoundland and lost all but life; the vessel was driven by storms back to Belfast Lough, where he worked as a carpenter in repairing it, and whence, on its next trip, it brought him safe to New York. He was stimulated by Dr. Patterson, with whom he came in contact accidentally, to renew his efforts to secure a college education; was graduated in Westminster College in '60; was licensed after taking his course of instruction in the U. P. Theological Seminary at Zenia, O.

He arrived at Nashville, Tenn., September 24, '63, and, October 13, opened for the instruction of freedmen what was afterwards known as the "McKee School." Released in '64, for a short time, because of exhaustion, he revisited Ireland; but he resumed the work at Nashville in the close of the year, and continued as superintendent until in '68. Being then a member of the Board of Aldermen and chairman of its Committee on Schools, he secured the passage of a bill by which the city "instructed the Board of Education to assume the supervision of the six schools now taught in the McKee school building, corner of Church and Ewing streets, * * retaining the present principal and teachers as far as they prove qualified in the usual examination, and assuming the expense of salaries, fuel, etc., in the same way and at the same rates as at the other public schools of the city." When he began work there, local laws imposed a fine of $50 and popular sentiment threatened hanging, for teaching a "nigger." He had lived to see the enterprise include instruction from A B C to the normal class, and also an industrial department, training girls to sew and knit, and he had won for this work the support of the city.

The influence gained by this man during his four years' life in Nashville was marvelous. Of loving disposition, fond of telling anecdotes, with the orator's gift of moving men to laughter or to tears, he might have been most useful and acceptable among those of his own race, but he heard a call to care for the souls of the liberated slaves, and he gave himself unreservedly to the cause. During that first terrible winter, his labors were almost incredible. In addition to its usual negro population, Nashville had 8,000 or upwards of "contrabands"—colored people who had left their masters, and, riding in empty cattle cars on the railroad or tramping wearily along after some passing body of troops, had made their way to that point. Many houses had been destroyed, the government was occupying a large number of those that remained, the normal population was probably doubled, the temperature was unprecedentedly low, and fuel so scarce that wood sold as high as $40 per cord. "Forty-two in one small house," "twenty in one room without fireplace or chimney, cooking their morsel on a few bricks laid to protect the floor, the smoke filling the room," "sick women and helpless children without a morsel of food or a spark of fire in their quarters when the cold was six degrees below zero"—these are a few of his entries, and those who knew his sympathetic, self-sacrificing life will readily believe the statement made by a Nashville paper, announcing his death, that "he frequently carried on his back, from house to house, wood which he had cut with his own hands, distributing to each family a little parcel, barely sufficient to keep them from freezing to death."

Coming to minister to the mental and spiritual wants of the black man, he became an embodiment of Providence, not only to those in the school but to all colored people, native or refugee. He secured food, clothing and lodging to the destitute, helped those out of work to get employment, supplied medicine to the sick, relieved from unauthorized impressment to unpaid labor, and aided in recovering pay from unscrupulous contractors. Devoted, energetic, possessed of great administrative ability, he was a missionary and a Freedman's Aid Commission, bound in one. When, the day after his arrival, one exclaimed: "Why, Dr. 'Kee has just been dropped down to us from Heaven, now in our time of need." That declaration found an echo in thousands of thankful hearts; and although his constitution gave way under the labors of that season's work, and the remaining five years of his life were a continuous battle with disease, in which it often seemed that he was supported only by the force of an indomitable will, his labors were ever in the same spirit, and his hold on the affections of these people was never weakened. Nor were his labors limited to the interests of the negro; he cared for all who were ignorant, for all who were oppressed; the cause of temperance and that of general education were included in his work of love. The Sons of Temperance declared that their cause had in his death "lost one of its ablest advocates and most valiant leaders." The Davidson County Teachers' Association, of which he was President at the time of his death, characterized him as "one of the most hard-working, successful, useful, pure and true friends to education and humanity." The Ministerial Association testified to his "liberal culture and earnest piety;" "his unfailing kindness of heart, attractive cheerfulness, and broad, catholic spirit toward all men."

At sixteen years of age, when a passenger on a ship which had lost its masts and steering apparatus, and been so stove-in as to leak badly, he went to the discouraged captain, who was drowning thought in rum, extorted from him the authority he had ceased to exercise, organized all available persons in two divisions, for work at the pumps and for lightening the ship, and during the days in which the captain kept his berth, restored hopefulness to passengers and crew and buoyancy to the water-logged vessel. Not less wonderful was the tact, the persuasiveness, the executive power, the forcefulness shown in his later life, when, a pioneer in a new work, dealing with prejudiced army officers, with heartless politicians, with faint-hearted friends, and with bitter enemies, he rallied the kindly-disposed to new efforts, and even coerced the indifferent into "working at the pumps." The youth saved the broken vessel, almost submerged, burdened with its load of pig-iron and bilge water; the mature man struggled long and successfully for a cause freighted with interests of vital importance to both church and state, with treasures more precious than any borne by the "Standard" when she sailed from Belfast Lough, with the sunlight gilding its sails on that evening of March 4, '50.

In '65 he married Miss Arbuthnot, who became a teacher, December 15, '63, and was a most successful worker in the mission. When his health broke down utterly in July, '68, he moved north as soon as possible, and reached, August 21, the house of his father-in-law, Rev. Jas. Arbuthnot, Harshaville, Adams Co., O., where he died, September 25. His wife died there in '74, and their little daughter at a later date.

Child:—Anna (born '68, died December —, '83).

JAMES P. McKEE (623) (born June 27, '43), married January 12, '69, MAGGIE JUNKIN DICKEY (born June 21, '—).

At sixteen years he became a member of the church at Lough Aghry—which has furnished more ministers to the Presbyterian body than any other in Ireland, and has given three missionaries to India—and was afterwards a pupil at the Royal Academic Institution at Belfast. In '64, he came to the United States; in '65, he entered Westminster College, from which he graduated in '68, having pursued a theological course meanwhile. On graduation, he spent a short time in Nashville, taking the place of his dying brother (622). Having had some experience in teaching, both before and after coming to the United States, he was appointed by the Governor of Tennessee, Superintendent of Public Instruction for Davidson Co., the county in which Nashville lies.

In October, '69, he resigned, and took up regular theological study at the U. P. Seminary in Allegheny, Pa. During the following summer, he was appointed missionary, and without any expression of preference on his part, assigned to work in India; a field, in which, a dozen years before, his boyish interest had been greatly enlisted by recitals of missionary experience on the part of his uncle, James McKee (64). He continued his studies in the seminary until the time for starting, took steamer (Anchor Line) in New York, November 5, '70, made short trips in Ireland and in Egypt, reached Bombay, February 2, '71, and Gujranwala, February 11. He was soon put in charge of the boys' school there, a charge which he retained for some fifteen years, making it an excellent institution. The report for '84 says: "The students of our school took more places of honor at the University Entrance Examinations than the students of all the other mission schools in the Punjaub put together, if we except a mission college located at Delhi; and at Middle School Examination, which also is conducted by the University, our school stood at the head of mission schools." The Government Inspector, in his last report, says: "The Gujranwala Mission School stands among the first mission schools of the province, if not the very first." Gratifying as was the educational success of the school, he was not satisfied with its results as a missionary enterprise; and, his extensive knowledge of dialects fitting him for evangelistic work, he has for some years been engaged chiefly as an itinerant preacher, living in tents, huts, caravansaries, etc., as may best suit his work in village or in jungle. He has not found his rough gypsy life an unwholesome one, and he is indisposed to exchange it for the more pleasant educational work in the city. For weeks at a time, he may not see any European; but the native Christians love him and look to him as father, counsellor and friend.

He has been back to the United States twice, in '81, and, for a few months, in '90. Mrs. McKee was back from the spring of '88 until the autumn of '91, when she returned to India, taking her youngest child with her. Mrs. McKee and the second daughter are both, like Mr. McKee, graduates of Westminster College, the mother in the class of '61, the daughter in '91. India address:—Care of American Mission, Gujranwala, Punjab, Northern India.

ELLEN McKEE (626) (born ———, '36) died October 6, '65), married April —, '62, HUGH M. GAMBLE (born August 14, '29).

Ella came to the United States in '54; was graduated at Westminster College in '60, in the same class with her brother Joseph G. and her cousin Isaac Wright (622). Previous to marriage, she taught for a time in the Jamestown Seminary. After her death there was found among her papers the following entry, made on the day of her graduation: "Be it mine to raise the lowly, to befriend the friendless, to remember those forgotten, to restore the erring and to dry the tears of the mourners or to mingle my tears with theirs." This thought is said to give the key to her everyday life. Mr. Gamble, of Irish parentage, was educated at the Franklin (Penn'a) Academy, of which his father, Rev. John Gamble, was principal. After the death of (626), he married Ellen Dickey, sister of (623'), by whom he has four children. He is a farmer and an elder in the "U. P." church.

DAVID McKEE (63) (born ———'0—, died ———, '76(?)), married ———, NANCY MATEER.

David was a farmer on his farther's farm, in Magheraconluce, but sold it in '64 to John Irvine, a relative, and removed with his family to Australia, where he died. Mrs. McKee is still in good health, although over ninety years old, and lives with her unmarried children at 153 Gt. Myers St., Geelong, Victoria, Australia.

Children:—Joseph (631), William (632) (born ———, 55),
Margaret (633), Rebecca (634) (———, died ———, '65), Annie (635) (born ———, '53, died ———, 86), Jane (636) (born ———, '57).

JOHN McKEE (631) born ———, '45), married ———,
MRS. PRUDENCE SMITH.

John is a wood-turner in Geelong, Victoria, he and William having been in that business about twenty years in the same shop.

JAMES McKEE (64) (born ——— '10, died February 2, '78), married July 6, '42, JANE BEATTIE (born ——— '14, died January —, '85).

While a lad, James was sent to business, and served his time in a soft-goods warehouse; but, his mind turning to the ministry, he entered the Belfast College, where he became a fine scholar in both mathematics and languages. From a letter of Robert Connor (12'), it seems that he preached, probably his first public sermon, at Dromore, May 14, '39, and that the Seaford congregation offered to call him, but Mr. Edgar, of Belfast, and Mr. Moorhead, of Loughaghry, would not have him accept. While a licentiate, he taught in Foyle College, Londonderry. He was soon ordained in the congregation of Ballyreagh, near Dungannon, County Tyrone, but he resigned in order to become a missionary. The day before his starting to India, he was married by Dr. P. S. Henry, late President of Queen's College, Belfast, to Jane, second daughter of Hugh Beattie, Esq., linen merchant, of Portadown and Armagh. Arriving in India, December 2, '42, he served as a missionary twenty-one years in the Gujerat district, with residence at Surat, Katiwaar, Rajkote, etc. This service was broken by a home residence of two years during the Indian Mutiny.

He loved the people of India, was loved by them, and, despite the fact that the climate had several times almost cost him his life, he would gladly have gone back to end his days there, but his medical advisers absolutely forbade it.

After quitting the mission, he labored successfully in Ireland to secure a million of Hindustani testaments for distribution in Gujerat. He also compiled some small books in Hindustani, and taught that language to young men about to go out to India. His last public work was in connection with the Getty Mission, in Farne, County Antrim. During her widowhood, Mrs. McKee lived in Belfast.

Children:—James Malcolm (641), Mary Sophia (642), Maggie (643).

JAS. MALCOLM McKEE (641) (born January 25, '56, at Katiwaar, India).

When six years old, he was placed in the school for missionaries' boys, at Blackheath, Kent, Eng.; on his father's return to Ireland, he was transferred to the Royal Academical Institution, Belfast; matriculated in Queen's College, Belfast, in medicine, where he took his junior classes and his first University examination; after five years' study in Edinburgh in his higher professional studies, hospital practice, etc., he took, in '83, his degree and his diplomas in the college there. In '84, he went to the west coast of Africa as surgeon on one of the British and African Company's steamers. He escaped malarial fever there, but, after a four months' stay, returned in charge of a transport ship with invalid soldiers and sailors, and was then appointed surgeon on board of one of the Dominion Line of steamers, Liverpool to Quebec and Montreal. He enjoyed these trips across the Atlantic very much, but after ten months settled, in May, '86, for professional work in Belfast, where he now lives. Address:—No. 6, Park Place, Ormean Road, Belfast.

MARY SOPHIA McKEE (642) (born Jan. 3, '47 in Surat, India), married ———, '69, SAMUEL CHAMBERS MAGEE (died ———, '86); also, in ———, '88, GEORGE WILSON.

She received her early training in a school for missionaries' daughters at Walthamstow, Essex, Eng. Mr. Magee was an extensive linen merchant in Belfast, where his children live, in Malone Park, and where his son is in his father's business warehouse, learning the linen trade. Mr. Wilson is Bank Manager, Coleraine.

INDEX.

A name is recorded each time some one not a descendant of David McKee (A) marries into the family. In the instances where a man enters the family, his name is followed by his wife's number. When the new name is that of a woman, her husband's number is given followed by an accent,—for example, 98' (read ninety-eight, prime)—to indicate that the name does not become a family name.
