PREFACE

The following account of the Macomb family since the settlement in America is based upon the records contained in the family Bibles of Alexander Macomb II. 1 (1748-1831); William Macomb II. 2 (1751-1796); Gen'l Alexander Macomb III. 1-7 (1782-1841); David Betton Macomb III. 2-10 (1793-1837); and John Anthony Rucker III. 2-7 (1788-1845).

Valuable information was also obtained from members of early generations, now dead, particularly Mrs. Eliza (Macomb) Whiting III. 2-11; Mrs. Catherine (Macomb) Mason IV. 1-7-2; Mrs. Alexandrine (Macomb) Stanton IV. 1-7-4, and Mrs. Sarah (Macomb) (Stanton) Williams IV. 1-7-11, all of whom spoke from personal knowledge.

Assistance has been given by many living members of the family, who have furnished the data for their own branches, and to them my thanks are here recorded.

In 1910, Mr. John de Navarre Macomb (4th) VI. 1-1-7-2-1 visited County Antrim, Ireland, in the neighborhood of Belfast, and also Dublin, where he made copies of the wills of John McCooam, John McComb and William McComb, and there collected the information as to the history of the family in the old country, given on page 4a.

In the system adopted in this record, the generations are given in Roman numerals, beginning with I for John Gordon Macomb who emigrated from Ireland 1755; and the number of each child in order of birth is given in Arabic numerals. Thus, Alexander, first child of John Gordon Macomb, is marked II-1, and William, second child, II-2; while the first child of Alexander is III-1-1 and the first child of William is III-2-1.

Those marrying into the family are given the same numbers as the members of the family whom they marry.

JOHN GORDON MACOMB (McCOMB), of Dunturkey, Parish of Ballynure, County Antrim, Ireland, born 1717, Ireland. Died after 1796, Detroit, Mich.

Married Jane Gordon, in Ireland.

Children: 1-Alexander, b. 27 July, 1748; 2-William, b. 14 Nov., 1751; 3-Anne, b. All born in Ireland.

John Gordon Macomb emigrated in 1755 with his wife and family and settled at Albany, N. Y. In 1769 they removed to Detroit, Mich., where his sons engaged in the fur trade and continued in the business of furnishing supplies to the British Army in which their father had previously engaged. (See p. 4a). In 1778, Fort Detroit consisted of a stockade with four gates on each side, with block houses over them on the east, west and north sides, each block house equipped with four 6-pounders. There were also two batteries of six guns each facing the river. The citadel, located where now is the corner of Jefferson Ave. and Wayne St., was surrounded with a row of pickets, and contained barracks for 300-400 men, a brick store-house, a hospital and a guard-house. The defenses were strengthened by the building of a new fort by Maj. A. S. De Peyster in 1780, and continued after the declaration of peace. In 1782, Maj. A. S. De Peyster made a "survey of the settlement", with the following result:

NOTE—The record in family bible of Gen. Alexander Macomb 2nd (III—1-7) gives the names of the three children in order as recorded, but no birth dates; those of Alex. (II—1) and Wm. (II—2) being taken from the records in their bibles. The late Admiral David B. Macomb 2nd (III—2-10) writes, 9 Aug., 1898, that the order should be 1-Anne, 2-Alex., 3-Wm.; but does not give Anne's birth date. Also, in the record of Gen. Alex. Macomb (III—1-7) the name of the parish in Ireland where the family lived is given as "Ballynewn"; but, as there is no parish by that name in Co. Antrim, and there is one called Ballynure in which Dunturkey is located, the latter is assumed to be correct. In the Hist. of Westchester Co., N. Y., p. 446, it is recorded that "John Macomb emigrated in 1742, and settled in Westchester Co. He was descended from the MacCombie family of Scotland. The arms of MacCombie are: "Argent, a saltire per fesse and per saltire, or and azure counter-changed." The date (1755), given in bible of Gen. Macomb (III—1-7), is assumed to be correct, as agreeing with birth dates of children.

Robert Navarre, father of his first wife (Catherine), was appointed, 1730, Notaire Royal under the French government in Canada. His ancestors came from France to Quebec in 1682. His descent is given in "Navarret" by Rev. Fr. Dennissen, of St. Charles (R. C.) Church, Baldwin Ave., Detroit, as follows: Robert, son of Antoine François de Navarre (m., 1695, Jeanne Pluyette); son of Antoine de Navarre de Plessis en Bois (m. 1665, Marie Lallement); son of Jean de Navarre (m., 1623, Susanne Le Calef); son of Martin de Navarre (m., 1593, Jeanne Lefebvre); son of Jean de Navarre (m., 1572, Perette Barat), who was a natural son of Antoine de Bourbon, Duke of Vendome and King of Navarre, 1554 (m., 1548, Jeanne d'Albert, heiress of Navarre). His brother was Henry IV, King of France.

Jane (or Janette) Marshall, Alex. Macomb's second wife, was born at Nassau, N. P., 27 Aug., 1761, and was half-sister of Isabella Ramsay, who m. John William Macomb (III—2-2), and of Mary Ramsay, who m. Alex. Von Pfister (III—3-1). She died 3 Mar., 1849, in Georgetown, D. C., and was buried with her husband in Georgetown Cemetery. About 1895, their remains were removed by U. S. Govt. to Arlington Cemetery.

Alex. Macomb came to New York City from Detroit about 1785. His residence on the west side of Broadway, between Trinity Church and the Battery (then No. 7), was one of the finest in New York, and was rented by the United States Government for Gen. Washington when first President, 1790. It was afterwards Bunker's Hotel. He was a member of the State Assembly, 1786-7. In 1791, he bought 4,456,960 acres of land north of Oneida Co. at 8c. per acre. This included the present counties of Lewis, Jefferson, St. Lawrence and Franklin, and parts of Oswego and Herkimer Counties, a total of 6,620 sq. miles—the greatest land transaction in the history of the State of New York. He was ruined financially during the (Napoleon) war, losing heavily by the seizure of his vessels and otherwise, and died poor, he and his second wife being supported in their old age by his son Alexander (III—1-7). He owned a farm on the Harlem, N. Y., from which "Macomb's Dam" derives its name, which was afterwards owned by his son Robert (III—1-8). He used a seal as shown on page 9a.

“At Broadway and 230th St. stands the fine old Macomb Mansion, now looking rather disconsolate, but with a dignified record behind it. About a century ago it was built by Alexander Macomb, and was frequently visited by Edgar Allen Poe, when the poet was living at Fordham. There is a tradition that the old inn built by Frederick Philipse in 1693 was incorporated in this house. For more than a century this hostelry was famous. Cock's Tavern was one of its early names, and it was immortalized by Cooper in "Satanstoe", who calls its landlady Mrs. Lighte, and shows us his hero, Corney Littlepage, and his friend Dirck stopping here several times. General Macomb* obtained the right to stablish mills and mill dams upon the Harlem River about a hundred years ago, dammed the stream at Spuyten Duyvil and at the present central bridge, and built his mill near the former spot. The plan failed, the mill stood idle and rotting, and finally fell during a storm. Later on the house was sold to J. H. Godwin, and is still in excellent condition, except for superficial wear and tear. It was just above this point that the original road divided, one branch continuing north on the Albany Post Road, and the other working its way to the north-east and becoming the Boston Post Road."

The grandfather of Sarah Jane Dring was Gallant, a French Huguenot refugee to England, where he married. His daughter (Gallant) married Dring and emigrated to Canada, where Sarah Jane was born 26 Feb., 1765. Dring died and his widow (née Gallant) married (before 1781) Capt. David Betton, Brit. Navy, commanding forces on Great Lakes. She died after 1793.

In 1776, Grosse Ile in the Detroit River was deeded to William Macomb and his brother Alexander by the Pottowatami Indians. The original deed on parchment, formerly in possession of Admiral David B. Macomb, U. S. N. (III—2-10) is signed by the "chiefs and principal leaders" of the tribe with their totems, 18 in number, and acknowledged by the Pottowatami Nation in Council, before Major A. S. De Peyster, Kings or 8th Rangers, Brit. Army, commanding at Detroit 1780.

William Macomb bought the "Cadillac" house, 1781, the year following his marriage, and his nephew Alex. Macomb 2nd (III—1-7) was born here, 3 April, 1782. The house was built by Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac, 1703, who made the original settlement in 1701, for the Chiefs of the Huron Indians. It was occupied by them until 1740, and was bought by James St. Martin, interpreter, in 1750, and occupied by him during the Pontiac War of 1763, when it received many bullet marks. Subsequent to this date, it was occupied by

The youngster, however, ran away and went to sea; rapidly rose to command his own vessel, and for many years led a life of adventure, of which the narration is more romantic than the incidents of any novel. For seventeen years nothing was heard of him except through remittances, which when he did turn up, he found had been embezzled by a connection through marriage to whom he had entrusted their investment. The gentleman died in New York at a very advanced age, leaving no male representative, while those in the female line are all in England.”

At the battle of Plattsburgh, 6-11 Sept., 1814, Gen. Macomb, commanding the U. S. land forces consisting of 1500 regulars and 700 militia, defeated 14000 British veteran troops under Gen. Sir Geo. Prevost, at the same time that Macdonough defeated the British naval forces on Lake Champlain. The following inscription is on his monument in the Congressional Cemetery, Washington, D. C., where he was buried: "Alexander Macomb, Major General, Commanding-in-Chief United States Army. Died at Washington the Seat of Government, 25 June, 1841." "It were but a small tribute to his memory to say that, in youth and manhood, he served his country in the profession in which he died, during a period of more than forty years, without a stain or blemish on his escutcheon." "The honors conferred upon him by President Madison, received on the field of victory for distinguished and gallant conduct in defeating the enemy at Plattsburg, and the thanks of Congress, bestowed with a medal commemorative of this triumph of the arms of the Republic, attest the high estimate of his gallantry and meritorious services."

He was commended by the States of Vermont and New York; and presented by the latter with a sword. He received the Freedom of the City of N. ## COPY OF LETTER FROM WM. SIEBEL WILSON (IV—I-10-1) TO JANE O. (MACOMB) MILLER.

My dear Cousin Jane,

I am in receipt of your affectionate letter of the 25th. Sophie and I were very much pleased and gratified at seeing your hand-writing upon which we congratulate you as evidence of the good state of your health.

Julia Macomb was the daughter of Robert Macomb, your father's brother, who resided at King's Bridge, your grandfather's country residence, and now a part of the northern annexed district of New York, at the confluence of the Spuyten Duyvil Creek and the Hudson (Harlem) River, near where the U. S. Govt. is now making a ship canal to join the East River. The old large stone mansion still exists in perfect condition, and is an object of interest to me each time I go to N. Y. City by the N. Y. & Putnam (Northern) R., which runs through my grounds and by King's Bridge, as when a boy at school I was a student at Union Hill Seminary (Academy) for near seven years (which was about a mile and a half east of King's Bridge), conducted by the Rev. Dr. Powell, who married the Widow DeLancey, and frequently passed my holidays and Sundays at King's Bridge, and was associated (with) chiefly in my enjoyments with Julia and Mary Macomb, her elder sister, both lovely girls, but destined to early deaths almost in their teens. Julia was engaged to be married (I forget the gentleman's name just now) when she died, and Mary died of inflammatory rheumatism unmarried—a very sad story.

I think Anna's children all promise very well. Alexander's ambition has been gratified by his appointment, and I expect Siebel's will be in like manner to the Navy, at the proper time.

I was very much gratified at seeing in the Tribune the promotion of Gen. Wheaton, which he so richly deserved. Miss Tracy is daily improving, and we hope to have her down stairs when the weather becomes more settled and warmer.

We regretted much not seeing you during your short stay in N. Y. City. If I had known your address, I would certainly have called.

My brother John is quite well again and at work.

Sophie sends her best love to you and Kittie with mine. Miss Tracy joins with us.

Your affte. Cousin,

WM. SIEBEL WILSON.

Artillery 19 June, 1813, and served with honor to the end of the War of 1812-15. He then voluntarily retired to civil life, but soon returned to the Army with the rank of Capt. in the Quartermaster's Dept., in which he rose by good conduct to the second place, that of First Colonel. In the Seminole War in Florida, as Acting Adj. Gen. his services were highly important; and he was rewarded with the brevet of Brig. He was frequently called upon to discharge important duties in his own department, acting for some time as Quartermaster Gen., and in all such positions this veteran officer was ever found a faithful and efficient servant of the Government.

The Army at large will mourn his loss, and also sympathize most deeply with his afflicted family. As a tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased, the officers of the Dept. of the Staff to which he belonged will wear the prescribed badge of mourning for thirty days.

BRODHEAD

The First Michigan Cavalry was sacrificed at Bull Run to save a portion of Pope's Army. When the Rebels were seen forming for the charge, Gen. Buford ordered the Regiment to charge, saying that he would support us with the Fourth and Fifth New York Cavalry. The First made the charge and drove the enemy back, and held them in check while the rest of the brigade and that portion of the Army on that part of the field fell back to the north bank of Bull Run. Buford never came to our support, but fled across the stream, saving himself and the rest of his command. The First Michigan was left to be massacred. I know this, for I took the order from Gen. Buford to Col. Brodhead to charge, and was myself in the first rank of the charge. I lost every man in my Company but five. All the rest were killed, wounded or taken prisoners in that fight. The next morning there were just five who answered the roll call. The Regiment's total loss was 133.

I cannot close this report of the battle without mention of some of the brave men who lost their lives at second Manassas that their country might live. Brodhead, who had the charge, great in all the grandeur of expected death, bared himself to every blow of the tempest. He had his horse killed under him, and received two gunshot wounds through his breast from which he died. While weltering in his life's blood on that disastrous field, he wrote these lines to his wife in Detroit: "I die a martyr to my country through Pope's imbecility and McDowell's treason; but the old flag will triumph yet."

This letter was published in the Detroit papers at the time, and created a great deal of excitement at the War Dept. at Washington. Every means was taken to suppress it.

IV—2-6.

BRODHEAD—(Continued)

All in all, I challenge the annals of warfare to produce a more brilliant and successful cavalry charge than the one made by the First Michigan Cavalry at Bull Run. That Regiment saved Pope's bleeding army there, as it saved the day at Gettysburg. (Copy from newspaper clipping).

Lt. John B. Bernadou commanded the torpedo boat "Winslow" during the Spanish War, and distinguished himself. (See copy from "American Navy" next following).

Taken from "The American Navy" by Frederick Stanhope Hill. Pages 333 to 336, inclusive.

AN AFTERNOON AT CARDENAS

During the month of May, 1898, the gunboat "Machias", Commander John F. Merry, the "Wilmington", Commander C. C. Todd, the torpedo-boat "Winslow", Lieutenant John B. Bernadou, and the revenue cutter "Hudson", Lieutenant F. H. Newcomb, were blockading the coast of Cuba, from Cardenas to Matanzas. It had become known to the blockaders that 3 small Spanish gunboats were lying at the wharves in Cardenas, and the matter of getting at these vessels was the current topic of discussion among the officers of the little fleet.

Cardenas Bay is a great shoal water lagoon, twenty-five miles long and six wide, shut off from the sea by a long peninsula on the west and having an irregular chain of small islands. The main channel had but ten and one half feet of water at one place and but fifteen feet in several miles of its course, so that the Spanish ships felt reasonably safe at their pier. But, after consultation with the commanding officers, Commander Merry, as senior officer, on May 9th sent the "Winslow" into the bay to endeavor to draw the enemy. Lieutenant Bernadou ran his vessel up to within a mile or so of the town and opened fire upon it with his little one-pounders. The "Machias" followed her to the chain of islands, where the water shoals, which was as far as it was prudent for her to go. The fire of the "Winslow" seemed to exasperate the enemy and one of the Spanish gunboats steamed out in chase. Retreating slowly the "Winslow" enticed the gunboat out until she came within long range of the "Machias", when Commander Merry opened fire, landing a six-pound shell at the first shot. The Spaniard at once turned and made the best of her way back to her pier. A channel mine was exploded at the same time near the "Winslow", but it did no damage.

On the morning of the 11th a channel, not often used, was sounded out and at one o'clock in the afternoon, the "Wilmington", the "Winslow" and the "Hudson" passed through this and ran up the bay toward the town, the "Winslow" leading, as she had the lightest draught of the three vessels. Arriving at a point within a mile and a half of the town the "Wilmington" stopped, and Lieutenant Bernadou was ordered to run in and cut out one of the Spanish gunboats. It was no light task for the little torpedo-boat to undertake, to run a mile and half to cut out a vessel, larger than herself, defended by the guns of two other gunboats and by the troops on shore, but Bernadou did not hesitate a moment and drove the "Winslow" at full speed for half a mile toward the town. Then he found his ship running between the lines of little red buoys, which seemed to mark the channel, but he was soon undeceived when a short battery opened fire with an accuracy that showed the buoys were placed to mark the range.

The second shot crashed through the "Winslow's" bow and passing aft completely wrecked her steering gear leaving her helpless. A moment later one of the Spanish gunboats began firing and the "Winslow" was not slow in replying from her three one-pounders. The next shot from the battery knocked a large splinter of steel from the "Winslow's" deck. It buried itself in Bernadou's groin making a serious wound, but he bound a towel around it and shoved a one-pound shell into the towel as a tourniquet. That checking the flow of blood, Bernadou ran aft to get the hand steering gear rigged. Before he could get there, however, another shot wrecked that also and as he paused to consider what next to do, a man from below reported one boiler pierced and one engine wrecked by a shell. The "Winslow" was now lying motionless under the combined fire of three of the enemy's gunboats and a shore battery.

It was now that the great resourcefulness of our men was shown. The boiler was spouting scalding steam, but the engineer cut off its connections and disconnected the smashed engine cylinder. Then with one boiler and a part of an engine, brave Bernadou ordered them to steam ahead to change the range of the enemy's guns. Having no steering gear however, the "Winslow" was nearly unmanageable, and Ensign Worth Bagley was stationed at the engineroom hatch to pass orders below to go ahead or back from time to time. Suddenly a shell came on board and struck Bagley, who staggered forward to the signal mast, clutched at it vainly, and sank down dead with his arms around it. A half dozen others were knocked about the deck, although not seriously injured. Then came the "Hudson" to the rescue and sturdy Captain Newcomb brought his vessel within reach and throwing a tow-line to the "Winslow", started off regardless of the fire of the Spaniards as leisurely as he might have taken a lighter in tow in the North River.

A shot parted the line, but he came alongside and made fast again while the "Wilmington" steamed up in range, shot one of the gunboats to pieces, and fired the town with her shells. Our loss in the affair was five killed and three wounded.
