A CENTURY OF SEVERINS

Genealogy of the Frederick J. Severin Family

This brief history of the Severin family in America has been the work of many people. Members of each branch collected the biographical information and supplied the names of the younger children to make certain that no one was omitted. To the best of our knowledge, this genealogy is complete except for the younger children of Mary Alice Reilly Allen (1a131) whose present address is unknown. Rose Catherine Wanstreet Johnson (1a23) typed the final copy of the manuscript and helped arrange for the printing.

The coding system was devised to trace descent through the various branches of the family. Each digit represents one generation and corresponds to the person's birth order in his family. Thus, Frederick William (8) was the eighth member of the original family and Urban F. (81) is his oldest child. Barbara, Urban's second child, is listed as 812 and her children as 8121, 8122, etc. In a few cases where there are more than 9 children in a family, the double numbers are underscored to represent one rather than two generations. For example, Bernard's youngest child, although a member of the third generation is given the code designation 8510 and her children will be 85101, 85102, and so on. The only exception is the use of letters to designate the two families of Mary Severin Wanstreet Van Verth and others who were married twice. The la's are Wanstreets and the 1b's are Van Verths.

It is suggested that you keep the family history up-to-date by writing additional information in the margins or by inserting more pages. To make new entries, simply use the parent's code number and add an extra digit to indicate each child's birth order in his family.

As our family continues to grow in size, and to scatter every more widely, it will become almost impossible to know everyone personally. Perhaps by tracing our common origin we can preserve some measure of unity. This task was undertaken in the hope that we can at least keep from becoming strangers to each other.

Frank T. Severin, S. J. (84) St. Louis University St. Louis, Missouri August 15, 1962.

THE FOUNDER

Frederick J. Severin was born in Germany in 1820, but his exact place of origin is somewhat uncertain. My father (8) remembered it as being Ölberg, a village within 50 miles of Baden Baden. The gazetteer of the U. S. Department of Interior gives the location of Ölberg as 48° 08' north longitude and 8° 13' east latitude which would be about 40 miles south of Baden Baden near the town of Triberg. A communication from the Board of Geographical names of the Department of Interior verifies this position even though Ölberg does not appear at this point on the map of the U. S. War and Navy Departments.

Joseph Severin (24) recalls that Mrs. Starrman, a neighbor born in Holland, use to speak German with Uncle Henry (2) when she came to visit the family. On one occasion, she remarked that the Severins came from a part of Germany where the people were really Catholic. From this he concluded that she was referring to Bavaria. An interesting bit of gossip related to James Severin (32) by his mother seems to favor a south German origin. According to this story, which may be apocryphal, Grandfather's "in-laws" opposed the marriage because he spoke low German whereas they used the "proper" high German dialect. On the other hand, Agnes Severin Wampach (21) insists that her father (2) spoke only high German which he learned at home. Both Edward (23) and Agnes spoke convincingly of Grandfather coming from Oldenburg. Since they are the closest links we have with the past, they may be correct. Oldenburg is the name of a former north German state, as well as two cities; one in Oldenburg with a population of over 120,000, and the other in Holstein with a population of 10,000. The only information we have is the name.

In 1842 Grandfather migrated to America, arriving in Baltimore at the age of 22. It is presumed that he found employment in the construction of a railroad or the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal together with the other German immigrants who later settled in the St. Clara Community of West Virginia. Fifteen years later he married Julia Ann Rahrig who was born in Cumberland, Maryland in 1839.

Henry, their oldest son, was six months of age when they purchased 265 acres of land from a Mr. Holle in the St. Clara Community (New Milton) West Virginia in 1860. The steep hillsides and narrow valleys were heavily wooded with poplar, oak, and chestnut trees. Grandfather left his family at the Bernard Mayberry home while he cleared enough space to build a log house. There were no saw mills and no market for logs, so he felled the huge trees across each other and lighted a fire as soon as they were dry enough to burn. The house was finished inside with handmade paneling and, when regular lumber became available, the outside walls were covered with modern siding. The large open fireplace remained until the building was taken down a few years ago. Julia Ann died in this home on November 27, 1875, after bearing eight children, the youngest of whom was less than two years of age at the time.

Although Grandfather Severin probably spoke English, he invariably used German at home. Mary (1) learned her first words of English in school and taught them to the other children. In a short time they no longer used German, even when speaking to their father.

John, a brother of Grandfather Severin, migrated to America about the time of the Civil War and served in the Union Army. Later he visited in St. Clara but, as often happened in the pioneer period, he failed to keep in contact with his relatives, so it is not known where he settled. The family presumed that he had gone West. Another brother is said to have migrated to Sweeden. Uncle Henry continued to correspond with a cousin Catherine in Germany until her death.

Grandfather Severin passed away on December 24, 1884, when Frederick William was a boy of 10. In the years which have passed since he was laid to rest in the small country cemetery alongside the St. Clara Church, his grave stone has fallen and disappeared. Nothing remains to remind the world he ever existed except an oblique reference on the marker of the adjoining grave:

Julia Ann Raric Severin Died Nov. 27, 1875 Age 36

Most members of the family spell Julia Ann's maiden name Rahrig rather than Raric. Agnes Severin Wampach feels certain that the former spelling is correct. She used to write to Julia Ann's brother, Valentine, and on one occasion visited him in Cumberland, Maryland. Mrs. Fred Rupert of Cumberland, with whom I have corresponded, used the same version of the the name in telling me that her father—in-law's first wife was Mary Ann Rahrig. On the other hand, Edward's wife, Stella, made two trips to the cemetery to verify the inscription given above. It is possible that a non-German stone cutter used his own phonetic spelling.

I like to think of Grandfather Severin as the typical American immigrant who, though buried in a nameless grave like the Unknown Soldier, lives on in his modest but solid accomplishments. The wealth he possessed consisted mainly in strength of character and an unshakable determination to make his own way in life.

He was not overly anxious about having only an elementary education and money enough for one-way passage in steerage on the sailing vessel which brought him to America in 45 days. He was confident in himself as a person and was not afraid of hard work. During his lifetime, he was able to set aside a sum of money which seems little enough by today's standards, but which a century ago was sufficient to give his children a start in life. I vaguely remember my father saying his share of the estate amounted to $1500. Since there were eight children in the family, this seems to be a rather large amount for Grandfather to have saved from the income of a rocky, hillside farm. He was very thrifty, however, and during the early years they grew their own food and wore homespun clothing. All the children, except Henry who remained on the original farm and Margaret who married in Chicago, were able to move to Kansas and buy land.
