Ralph Shepard

IN THE SIXTH GENERATION,

I LOVINGLY INSCRIBE

THIS BOOK.

PREFACE.

THE two hundredth anniversary of Ralph Shepard's death seems a fitting time in which to issue this book, as a tribute to his memory.

Owing to the lack of material from which to draw, it has been impossible to make his history complete. A bundle of old family letters or his diary (provided he had ever kept one), would be invaluable, but, without them, we must rely exclusively upon the ancient records. With our stock of information so limited, we cannot penetrate into the privacy of his home nor gain more than a slight insight into his character, but are obliged to content ourselves with the principal events of his life. It has been my aim, however, to examine thoroughly all sources of information at command, and, so far as possible, to make this work exhaustive.

Several gentlemen have kindly assisted me, to whom I offer here my sincere thanks. I am especially indebted to Judge Henry M. Shepard of the Appellate Court of Illinois, to Mr. Don Gleason Hill, President of the Dedham Historical Society, and to Mr. E. N. Sheppard of New York.

As all my readers may not be familiar with the exact method of reckoning time employed in the seventeenth century, an explanation will not be out of place. It should be understood, then, that the dates in sixteen hundred do not correspond with those of to-day. To make the present or new style agree with the Julian or old style calendar, it is necessary to add ten days to all dates given in this book. Before the adoption of the Gregorian calendar the year used to begin in England on March twenty-fifth. In seventeen hundred and fifty-two Parliament enacted that the year thereafter should begin with January first, but the change had actually been made before. To avoid confusion, the practice of double dating was adopted. Both years (as will be seen by consulting the text) were given to all dates between January first and March twenty-fifth.¹

Another matter should be noted. At the time in which Ralph Shepard lived, in addition to a great lack of uniformity in spelling, words were constantly abbreviated. In all extracts in this work the ancient spelling has been preserved as far as possible. Some of the signs, however, should be explained:

An apostrophe ['] is made to take the place of a peculiar stroke of the pen which signified an abbreviation, impossible to reproduce in type.

A bracketed space [] indicates words illegible; and words within brackets are doubtful.

ċ. stands for c. with a flourish over it.

m̄. stands for m. also with a flourish over it.

p. stands for par, per, por: e. g. pson-person.

p̄. stands for pro: e. g. pporcon-proportion.

But few words need be added in closing this introduction to the history of Ralph Shepard. It has been written for his descendants. Should they derive any satisfaction from its perusal, it would be an additional gratification to the author, to whom the work has been a genuine pleasure.

IN ENGLAND.

With the exception of two or three facts, we know little about Ralph Shepard before his departure for America. He was born in 1603, and presumably passed his early days in England, plying his trade.

He was a tailor,¹ and probably an officer in the Drapers' Guild.² It has been said that it takes nine tailors to make a man, but the slur is unjust. The first Lord Mayor of London was a draper³ and membership in a guild in the seventeenth century was an honor. At that time the trades held a vastly different relation to the social life of England³ than they do at present, for citizenship of London was acquired after the time of Edward II. chiefly through the crafts.⁴ We may infer, then, from Ralph's being a member of the Drapers' Guild that he was also a citizen of London.

He must have been influenced by those troublous times in the reigns of James I. and Charles I., when the people were struggling for political and religious liberty; for it was on the twenty-fourth of April, 1634, when Archbishop Laud was persecuting the non-conformists, that Ralph was summoned before the Court of High Commissions.⁵ This was "An ecclesiastical court of very extensive jurisdiction, for the vindication of the peace and dignity of the church, by reforming, ordering, and correcting the ecclesiastical state and persons, and all manner of errors, heresies, schisms, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities."¹ The sentence pronounced against "Ralph Shepard of Limehouse, Midd^x,"² as he is called, is not given, but it is most probable that he left England on account of the sentence of the Court.

At any rate, we know that a little more than a year later, he sailed for America. The last day of June, 1635, accompanied by his wife, Thanks, and daughter Sara, he went aboard the Abigall. She was bound for New England in charge of Robert Hackwell, master.³ Ralph's wife, according to the entry, was twenty-three, his daughter two, and he himself twenty-nine. His age at any rate is not correct, for we find by his tombstone and the Charlestown records that at this time he must have been thirty-two. He was furnished, we learn further, with a certificate from the minister of Stepney parish.³

According to well authenticated family tradition the Shepards came from Stepney, near London. Limehouse was then a hamlet in Stepney parish—St.-Dunstan's-in-the-East. It was from the minister of this parish that Ralph obtained his certificate. In 1730 Limehouse became the separate parish of

AT DEDHAM.

Turning now to his history in America, the first mention that we find of Ralph Shepard is in the town records of Dedham. A company of people left Watertown to settle Dedham,³ and it is said that he was in the former place. Savage says: "First sat down prob. at Watertown, but by Farmer is call. of Weymouth."⁴ He was not at Weymouth till later. The Watertown records show nothing, but, as the early Dedham town meetings were held in Watertown,⁵ he was probably in the latter place for a time at least.

The first record that we have regarding Dedham is a petition for a tract of land signed by twelve persons.⁶ Their names are not given, but one of them may have been that of Ralph. Following this, Sept. 3, 1635, the Great and General Court ordered the settlement of a plantation about two miles above the Charles River. A society was formed, and the first recorded meeting (attended by Ralph) was held August 18, 1636.¹

September 5, 1636, at the third recorded town meeting, Ralph Shepard and the others assembled petitioned for a confirmation of the old grant and for an additional tract of land. They asked, also, to have their town called "Contentment or otherwise what you please." Three days later the General Court granted the petition, naming the town Dedham.² This was the act of incorporation.³

Some time before this (though we have not the exact date) the covenant must have been drawn up, for the petition was "Subscribed by all that haue vnder written in Coven^t."⁴ It is an important document, for it shows what sort of stuff these men were made of, and interesting to us because signed by Ralph. It runs as follows:—

THE COVENANT

I We whose names ar here vnto subscribed. doe. in the feare and Reuerence of our Allmightie God, Mutually: and seuerally pmise amongst our selues and each to: other to pffesse and practice one trueth according to that most pfect rule. the foundation where of is Euerlasting Loue:

Then follows a long list of names of which the eighth is "Ralph: Shepheard."

The people who settled Dedham, we may infer from the Covenant, were Puritans, full of purpose and resolution. They feared and revered Almighty God, desired to live together peaceably and wished to "keepe of[f]" all who differed from them in faith. As they did not want to break away from old English customs, were ready and willing to pay taxes and wished to be subject to the law, they must have been stanch Englishmen. Ralph Shepard, then, we conclude, was a Puritan, fond of his mother country, energetic and enterprising.

He certainly seems to have done his part in the town work. Of the twenty-six recorded town meetings held before there were selectmen, he attended twenty-one.¹ As will be seen by the appendix,² Ralph and others agreed to take four instead of two acres of swamp. One man refused this extra burden. Again it is to be observed that he may have made some sort of sacrifice for the benefit of the town, as there is mention of his receiving a lot as a gratification—that is a compensation.³ Then in January, 1638, he undertook to do the "Crosse Cutting every 2: foote over to be allowed sixe pence & soe eu'y scantling after y^t Rate." This was for the meeting house.⁴ Until we come to the land transactions, the above references (except for a few others appended in a note⁵) constitute all that we find regarding Ralph in the Dedham records.

Before proceeding further, let us inquire how the owner came into possession of his land. "In New England," we are told, "the soil was granted by the government of the colony, not to an individual, but to a corporation. It was from the corporation that each occupant derived his rights. * * * * The New England township was a land holder, using its position for the corporate good, and watching jealously over the origin and extension of individual rights. * * * * Part of the land was granted in lots, part was left in joint pasture, part was to be tilled in common. Though this was cultivated on a uniform system, yet apparently it was cut up into strips which were allotted, not in annual rotation, but in permanence, to the different holders."¹

Ralph appears to have had a good deal of land granted to him by Dedham. In all we find nine such tracts recorded, and a few sales of land made by him.² The first and most important grant was twelve acres of meadow on the high street.³ This was his home lot. On July 6th, 1638, the town voted that the minister, Mr. John Allin, might purchase part of it, so that he could be nearer the meeting house.⁴ At the next town meeting, it was voted that Ralph Shepard should have a share of a certain piece of land and "ye over plus towards satisfaction of y^t he p^ted wth at home."¹ On the 21st of August, 1639, he sold half of the same lot to Mr. Allin,² and this piece, as appears by a later record, was on the "south side of the high streete"³. In 1642 he received land from the town to be added to his house lot, and in 1650 he obtained his last Dedham grant.

WEYMOUTH AND REHOBOTH.

But prior even to 1642 he must have removed to Weymouth, for his son Isaac was born there on the twentieth of June, 1639, and his daughter Trial, on the nineteenth of December, 1641.⁴

He owned land there, but the records of the town were not kept fully till 1643,⁵ so that it is mentioned only as a boundary.⁶ The description of the land where it is thus mentioned must have been compiled not earlier than October 26, 1642 to May 21, 1644.¹ The birth of his children would lead one to presume, however, that he possessed land in Weymouth before either of these dates.

According to Savage "He was of Rehoboth perhaps in 1644,"² but it seems more probable that he never lived there. July 3, 1643 Ralph Shepard with twenty-nine others ("Being, by the providence of God, inhabitants of Seacunk, intending there to settle") signed a compact instituting a government of nine men.³ From a comparison of dates and from other circumstances, Mr. Newman in his book Rehoboth in the Past supposes that the compact was "made at Weymouth, before the general migration, which most probably did not take place till the spring of 1644, O. S."³

This compact should be of peculiar interest to descendants of Ralph Shepard, for it bears his autograph signature—the only one known to be in existence. Below is a reproduction of the original, made from an accurate tracing:—

It will be noticed that the writing is old script. The spelling is plainly Ralph Shepherd.

Though we have no other of Ralph's autographs, it is more than likely that he did not always spell his name in this way. In those days people were not so accurate, and the same name was spelled in many ways. As will be seen further on¹, Ralph's wife spells the name Shepp'd.

Leonard Bliss, Jr., in his History of Rehoboth, gives as the date of this compact the third of July, 1644.² The town records in their present condition throw no light upon the subject, but, in the discrepancy of dates between Newman and Bliss (1643 and 1644), it is well to know that the Nine Men (whose government was instituted in the compact just mentioned) were chosen June 9th, 1845³—five days after the incorporation⁴ of the town.

Now the first division of land was granted by the Court of Plymouth to the "inhabitants of Seaconk alias Rehoboth," "about the year 1643⁵." This was according to "person and estate," and the valuation of the tract of "Ralph Shephard, now James Redeway's" is £121, 10s⁶. Following this, his name is among those who "Forfeited their lots for not fencing, or not removing their families [that is to Rehoboth] according to a former order, made the 24th of the 8th month, 1643."⁶ This clearly indicates that Ralph was not at Rehoboth at this time. But he received a share of woodland, June 31, 1644.⁷ Again:

June 9th, 1645, he was granted a lot on the great plain.¹ Our last reference, which appears to be a summary of his land, is found on the records undated. I quote it entire, as it cannot be found elsewhere in print:—

“The Land of Ralph Shepherd his home lot [eight] acres twelve acres three qtrs. and 25 rods in the wood land plaine being 54th lot an acre 30 Rods of fresh mead — lying in the [Rose] meadow three acres three qtrs. of salt marsh.”²

After this entry there is quite a space before the next, as if to record other lands not granted Ralph at all. This and the other facts previously cited seem to indicate that, though he may possibly have been to Rehoboth, he never settled there.

Reverting now to Weymouth, we find that “Ralph Shepherd & Nicholas Byram” were appointed “viewers” of fences, the 9th of February, 1645–6, “for the lower plantation.”³ There is but one more reference to him (dated the 5th of December, 1659) in the Weymouth records. It is as follows:—

“Voted Also that Mr. Thatcher shall have granted him that small parcell of land lying within his fence neere the place where Goodman Shepherds house stod.”⁴

This entry shows that Ralph (for it must have been he, as there is mention of no other Shepard on the Weymouth land grants) had a house at Weymouth and that he had moved away.

AT MALDEN.

Ralph Shepard was certainly at Malden during this decade. He was not one of the incorporators in 1649, but was concerned in the ordination of Mr. Mathews¹ in 1650², as appears from a petition presented to the Court May 16, 1655³. In this petition Ralph Shepard and seven others " Humbly acknowleg the offenc they gave the Court & seuerall churches about the ordjnation of Mr. Mathews, &c. and * * * * the Court doth well approve and accept of the peticoners acknowlegments of their irregular actings in those times"⁴.

The above quotation is important as it shows that Ralph was a ruling elder in the church at Malden, for, at that time, the duty of the ruling elder was to ordain the officers of the church.⁵ " Letchford in his ' Plaine Dealing', written in 1641, says: ' Some churches have no ruling elders, some but one, some but one teaching elder; some have two ruling and two teaching elders' ”¹. Though Ralph was associated with seven others in ordaining Marmaduke Matthews, we are not to infer from this that he was not an elder, since it was then customary for the churches occasionally to unite at an ordination and for several elders to participate². He held a high position and must have exercised considerable influence and been prominent in the affairs of the church. In fact, this was the case, for he had much to do with the dispute which arose in regard to Marmaduke Matthews.

The controversy occasioned a great deal of ill feeling and the General Court instituted proceedings against the minister and Church at Malden. On the seventh of May 1651, Mr. Matthews was summoned to Court for preaching heretical doctrines, but “As he did not give satisfaction by an humble acknowledging of his Sinne &c.,” on May 21, he was fined ten pounds.³

On the twenty-fourth of October 1651, the church of Malden was represented at Court by its leading men, but their defence was not accepted and they were fined fifty pounds.⁴

Four days later comes “The Petition of many inhabitants of Maldon & Charlstowne Mestickside,” signed, in behalf of Mr. Matthews, by thirty-six women.⁵

Like the Rehoboth compact, it should be especially interesting to us, as it bears the signature of

Thanklord Shepp'd

The petition is of further value to us in showing the Christian spirit of the Shepards, for it is probable that Ralph and Thanks acted in accord. It runs in part as follows:—

“The Almighty God in great mercie to our souls as we trust, hath, after, many prayers, endeavors, and long waiting, brought Mr. Matthews among us, and put him into the work of the ministry: By whose pious life and labors the Lord hath afforded us many saving convictions, directions, and consolations, whose continuance in the service of Christ if it were the good pleasure of God, we much desire.”²

As among other things Mr. Matthews held the “Scriptures to be the foundation of a dogmatical and historical faith, but not of a saving faith,”³ we see from this last mentioned petition and the others that the Shepards had a spirit of independence. It is not necessary to infer that they agreed in every particular with their minister, but they certainly must have been tolerant.

October twenty-sixth, 1652, in answer to a petition of the church at Malden, after Mr. Matthews had confessed his error, his fine and ten pounds of that of the others were remitted.¹ Four of the petitioners' names have plainly been cut from the original document, and it may be that among those lost was that of Ralph Shepard.² Again, May 16, 1655, Ralph with six others prayed for a release from the remainder of their fine of thirteen pounds six shillings.³

As this is the last of the Matthews controversy, we will inquire what had happened in the meantime. On February tenth, 1650-1 Ralph was blessed with the birth of a daughter, whom he named Thanks, and some time in June, 1653, with a son, whom he called Jacob.⁴

About two months after this daughter's birth we find by the Court Records that he took the oath of Freeman⁵ to insure himself greater privileges, as may be seen by the following:—

“The freemen of the colony were the body of electors, those entitled under the terms of the charter, and the colonial laws made in pursuance thereof, to vote in charter elections and to hold charter offices. They were a minority only, and a small minority, of the members of the congregations or the inhabitants of the towns.”⁶

There is little more of importance before we come to the deeds,¹ but if we turn to the Court Records again, we find that in 1661 Ralph administered an estate, later in the same year had something to do with straightening the highway and in two instances paid his son's fines.²

A few days after Goodman Shepard and his three associates were "p'sented for straitening the highway," December twenty-ninth, an entry occurs in the Charlestown Records, showing that Ralph unlawfully "Cutt timber * * * * of [f] Cha'tow' Comon."³ Others were fined for doing the same thing, but he was passed by. Ralph no doubt supposed he had a right to the wood. When Malden was set off in 1649, Charlestown kept a large tract of land across the river adjacent to Malden.⁴ The common from which Ralph cut the timber must have been on the Malden bank of the river, opposite Charlestown proper, in what was called Charlestown-Mystic-side. This easily explains Ralph's mistake.

Turning now to the deeds,⁵ we find that on the nineteenth of March, 1651 "Ralph Shepheard of Maldon * * * * Taylor" bought land of Dr. Richard Palsgrave (the first physician of Charlestown) who like himself was from Stepney.⁶

There are three other documents in which Ralph Shepard is called "Ralph Shepard of Maulden." In the first one he "layeth claime to a p'cell of land ly'ng in Maulden conteyneing ab^t sixty rods ly'ng tri-anglewise." The land formerly belonged to Jno. Lewis deceased. The date is 1661, but as it says "Demand as above said was long since made."¹

The next document referred to throws more light upon Ralph Shepard. The date is February, 1663. It is a deed from him to Abraham Hill. The amount of land is not specified, but the rate per acre is three pounds and ten shillings.²

In this deed and in the deed from Richard Palsgrave referred to above, as well as in a deed from him when he was living in Concord, Ralph Shepard is called "Taylor." His trade was that of a tailor, but he probably did not practice it much, if at all, in this country. He owned a great deal of land, and, though there is no record of it in so many words, it seems as though he must have been a farmer.

The description of his land appears to indicate as much. In the deed of February, 1663, it is spoken of as "both pasture & broaken up land." It is in the next deed that it seems more evident that he was a farmer. Ralph Shepard makes over to Benjamin Bunker "all that my dwelling house in Maulden with all the out houses, barnes, stables, orchards, yards, gardens and land thereto adjoyeing conteyneing by estimaccon about foureten acres, be it more or be it less, * * * * also a fiften acre lott of swamp land ly'ng in the great swamp * * * * also a parcell of land conteyneing three acres and a half, be it more or be it less, lying within ye bounds of Charlestowne * * * * also foure hay lotts, ly'ng within the bounds of Charlestowne * * * * also two Hay lotts ly'ng in Charlestowne bounds."¹ All this land he sold for one hundred and sixty pounds. That was a good deal of wealth in those days. It amounts to about eight hundred dollars, which must at least be quadrupled to make it represent an equivalent amount to-day. This deed, then, seems to show that Ralph Shepard was at this time a thrifty and well-to-do farmer.

AT CONCORD.

Though apparently so well established at Malden, as we saw by the last deed (dated July 7, 1666), Ralph Shepard sold his home and moved to Concord.

His daughter Triall had married Walter Power at Malden March 11, 1660-1.² In 1666 they were living in Concord, but when Ralph moved there is uncertain, though it seems probable about that time. It was his daughter's home and this must have been an attraction.

He bought a large farm in Concord of Lt. Joseph Wheeler, and on March twenty-fifth, 1666 deeded sixty acres of this land to Walter Power. It was not, however, till 1678 that Joseph Wheeler deeded his property to Ralph, perhaps because Ralph did not pay for it entirely until then. This farm was located in the New Grant (made in 1655 and laid out in 1666) which comprised the present territory of Acton and portions of Carlisle and Littleton.¹ It is described in the deed as follows:—

“One parcell of land * * * * conteyneing by estimaçcion six hundred & ten ac^{rs} of upland, swamp, & meadow land, be it more or less, butted & bounded northeast by Chelmsford lyne, & Southwes^t upon Nashobah Township, & Southeast upon a great pond called Nagog, & so ly'ng in a tryangle, with the poyn^t of the said triangle, northwest.”²

The land he had sold to Bunker for one hundred and sixty pounds consisted of thirty-two and a half acres and six hay lots, all apparently improved land; while this land amounted to six hundred and ten acres of what would appear from the price to be unimproved property.

On March 25, 1666, as we have seen, Ralph Shepard deeded sixty acres of his farm to his son-in-law Walter Power. The land thus deeded was from the northern part of the farm. The price is not stated, but Walter Power gave “vallauable consideraccon and satisfaccon * * * * in hand payd.”

A long gap now occurs before we have any record of Ralph again. On May 29th, 1681 he executed two deeds, thus parting with another portion of his Nashoba farm. One of them was to his son Abraham and the other to the three children of his son Isaac. The former was near the “Indian Plantation called

² See Appendix C, V., p. 42.

Nashobey" and consisted of "one house lott * * * *
 Also the uper end or halfe of the long medow * * * *
 Also a swampe at the head of sayd medow about fore or fiue acres. Also a Part of the Great medow * *
 * * and one third part of my said farme that is yet undevided."¹

The other deed was drawn in favor of Isaac's sons and daughter instead of to Isaac himself, as he had been killed by the Indians February 12th, 1676.² The acreage is not given, but it is described as "One house lott * * * * bounded South by my owne house lott upon the West partly by the Indian plantation and partly by land belonging to Peter Dill; upon the North by Abraham Shepard; upon the East by Walter Powers, also the lower end of the long meadow, bounded Westerly by Abraham Shepard * * * * Also part of the great meadow bounded Easterly" and southerly by Abraham Shepard and on the north by Walter Powers. "Also—one third part of my said farme yet undivided."³

These deeds give us some faint glimpse of Ralph Shepard at this time. He was now seventy-nine and an old man. As there is no release of dower in either of the last two, dated 1681, and as his wife signed all others from him, she must have died before this.

² Midlx. County Probate Records (MS.): No. 14,475. It has been said that Isaac and Jacob Shepard were killed by the Indians, but Chas. H. Walcott (in Concord in the Colonial Period p. 107 note) says: "An examination of the town records and other sources of information fails to disclose any evidence that a person named Jacob Shepard ever lived or died in Concord."

³ See Appendix C, VII., p. 48.

His son Isaac was dead, but Isaac's children lived close by. His daughters Trial and Thanks, with their husbands, Walter Power and Peter Dill, and his son Abraham lived near at hand. He seems to have been surrounded with his kindred.¹

THE CLOSE OF LIFE.

We have been able to catch but a glance here and there of Ralph Shepard, and now eleven years more roll by in silence. Then all we find is the simple record of his death. He is buried in the old Bell Rock cemetery in Malden, and over his grave stands a tombstone weatherbeaten with the storms of two centuries.

On the opposite page is a heliotype of this quaintly carved old stone. The hour-glass and cross-bones tell us that time does not tarry and that so death comes to all; while the wings on either side of the skull suggest the hope of a blessed immortality. Below these symbols, we read that Ralph Shepard died aged ninety, September 11, 1693.

But, though we are sure that he died just two hundred years ago, we cannot be certain of the day of the month; for, according to the Charlestown records, it was a little earlier. There we find the following entry:—

“Ralph Shepherd, aged ninety yeares, dyed August 20th. . . 1693 ”¹

The difference is slight, yet we should be better satisfied if the two records agreed. In those days, however, such mistakes were common. It may be that the tombstone was put up, and the inscription written from memory sometime after Ralph's decease, —but this is only conjecture.

As Ralph's death is recorded at Charlestown and as he was buried in Malden, he must have died at the former place, presumably at Charlestown-Mystic-Side, where Thomas Shepard² lived. Ralph's advanced age would lead us to suppose that he was away from Concord on a visit only, and that death overtook him unawares.

CONCLUSION.

Thus the history of Ralph Shepard ends. The story is told of this Puritan who left his native land, more than two and a half centuries ago, to make a new home in the New World.

Unquestionably he was influenced by the exciting events of his time. Being driven from England by religious intolerance, he passed the best part of his long life in the Colony of Massachusetts Bay, and did his share in promoting the growth and prosperity of not a few of her towns. Tolerant himself, he could not but be grieved at the ill-treatment of the fanatical Quakers. Moreover the death of one of his sons by the hands of the Indians, when the latter were banded together to exterminate the hated foreigners, must have caused him to watch with painful interest the progress of King Philip's bloody war. His heart was no doubt stirred with anger by the wrongs inflicted on New England, and, when nearing his end, he must have rejoiced at the overthrow of the tyrant Andros and the success of the bloodless revolution. Then, too, the year before his death is marked by the cruel persecution of the witches at Salem. His life covered nearly the whole of the seventeenth century, from the reign of James I. to that of William and Mary in England, and in America from the earliest British settlement to the granting of the new Massachusetts charter.

Yet, living as he did in such an epoch, he does not seem to have departed from the even tenor of his way. Upheld by a strong faith in God, the old Puritan tried to fulfil his duty and do his daily task. He tilled the soil, and by the sweat of his brow provided homes for his children and his children's children. Thus his last days must have been made happy by the consciousness of a life well spent.

May his descendants never fail to do him honor.
