The Compiler has spared no pains in collecting information on this subject; and yet he is apprehensive there are some inaccuracies. It has been a source of pleasure to him, which he readily acknowledges, that in all cases where he has applied for information, with one exception, they appeared to do it with cheerfulness. In that case, every exertion has been used to obtain a knowledge of his and his father's family. It is believed the knowledge obtained is tolerably correct, except their births, which the Town Clerk said would require considerable research, owing to the want of arrangement in the records.

N. B. Those names in the body of this work, printed in Small Capitals, were engaged in the service of their country, in the Revolution. Those in Italic, were engaged in the old French War.

All the dates in this work are in old style till the year 1752, then they are inserted in new style.

GENEALOGY OF

JOHN THOMSON.

JOHN THOMSON, was born in the north of Wales, in the year 1616. It is said his father died shortly after his birth, and his mother married again. The name of the step-father is concealed from the memory of man, behind that impenetrable veil of oblivion, which time is spreading over the generations of man. The legal parents became the protectors of the child. He went where they went, and received his scanty education from their lips.

He came to this country in the third embarkation from England. The second, which arrived at Plymouth, was Capt. Robert Cushman, in the Fortune, bringing thirty-five families, the remainder of Robinson's society, Nov. 11th, 1621. The third arrival was two vessels, containing sixty or seventy men, some of them had families, under the patronage of Thomas Weston, a merchant of distinction, in London. Among this number, was the subject of this treatise. They landed at Plymouth early in the month of May, 1622. John Thomson was then in the sixth year of his age.

Whether originally all, who bear the orthoepey of the family name, were of the same family, cannot now easily be ascertained. The first knowledge we have of the name with any certainty, is from the ancient record of heraldry, when aristocracy invented a badge, to distinguish the royal degrees of family greatness. Then the name was familiarly known in England, Scotland and Ireland. They each spelt the name differently, and were considered as distinct families. They each selected a different badge of heraldry.

Those in the southwestern part of England spelt their name Tompson. There was one descended from this family, settled in the ministry at Berwick, on the Piscataqua river, Rev. John Tompson. Those in Ireland, spelt their name Thompson. Those in the south of Scotland, spelt their name Thomson. Of this family were the celebrated poet James Thomson, and Charles Thomson, the Secretary of the Continental Congress, in revolutionary days. The north of Wales being contiguous to Scotland, we are led to consider the subject of our inquiry a descendant of the Scottish family, and not of the Irish.

The circumstance of his youth, when he arrived in this country, and the limited means of education which he had, would lead us to conclude, he did not know his lineage. This conclusion is strengthened from the circumstance, the signature to his will is spelt Tomson. This may not be viewed strange or unaccountable, when we bear on our minds, the vast number of persons in Europe, who then and even now, have no specific knowledge of their grand parents. Even in our own country, with all the means of education and records, cases may easily be found, where a person could not tell from what nation in Europe his progenitor descended. We naturally look amongst the best informed in that day for correct information. In his deed of Spring-hill, his name is spelt Thomson. Rev. John Cotton, the first minister in Halifax, spelt his name in this way; and the records of the town of Mendon, spell the name in the same manner. The letter p was not introduced into the name by any of his descendants, till a century and a half had rolled away.

Tradition is silent respecting any incident in his life, till he arrived to manhood. Then it presents him to us in many events interesting and entertaining. It appears from his will, he was a carpenter. Besides building houses for others, he built one for himself in each of the places he selected as a settlement, and one for each of his sons, John and Jacob, in the latter place. Tradition says he built the first framed Meeting-house in Plymouth, and as a compensation for his labor, the town gave him a deed of a piece of land, from the Market-house, back, extending to the herring-brook, now called Spring-hill.

He married Mary Cook, the second daughter of Francis Cook, who was one of the first adventurers in 1620.

John Thomson makes his first appearance as a farmer, at Sandwich. He purchased in that part of the town called Nobscusset, where he lived a few years. He thought he could better his fortune for himself and children, by moving into the more interior part of the country. He accordingly selected a place, thirteen miles west of Plymouth, on the confines of Bridgewater, Middleborough, and what was then called Plymouth, now Halifax. Here he built a log house in Middleborough, about twenty rods west of the Plymouth line, where he lived till the house was burnt by the Indians.

His settlement amidst a surrounding savage enemy, must have been attended with many troubles and fearful apprehensions. He must have felt the need of all the confidence in God that religion could afford, which brought our fathers into this country. He felt the necessity of using every precaution which his ingenuity could suggest, or his wisdom dictate. Oral tradition has handed down to us a few incidents illustrative of this remark.

There was at that day, a stream of water near the west side of the house, where fish resorted, but the hand of improvement has caused it to become dry for a considerable distance—and even then nothing but a rill. One morning, he had caught some fish, his wife had them over the fire cooking; two Indians came into the house in a very morose manner; one of the Indians went to the pot and pulled out one of the fish by the tail, upon which she reproved him very sharply—the other Indian then drew his knife and brandished it at her in a threatening manner—she immediately seized the splinted broom, and heroically drove them out of the house. Their behavior was such, it excited a fearful alarm in her mind. This she related to her husband when he came in, which led them to go that night to the garrison at Middleborough, a distance of seven miles. After peace was concluded they returned to their farm. There is another instance related, worthy of notice. Three Squaws came to the house one afternoon, and were exceedingly friendly—they were very officious in proffered assistance and varied acts of kindness; they went with her into the garden, and cheerfully assisted in picking beans for the next day's repast. This singular behavior she related to her husband on his return—he replied, “we must instantly pack up our things, and go to the garrison.”

There is an oral anecdote of a policy which he adopted for his preservation from Indian surprise. He agreed with a man by the name of Jabez Soule, who had settled in the northwestern part of what is now Plympton, to entice a young Indian to come and live with them, and learn to work and live like the English. They succeeded in their overtures--the Indian came and lived with each of them alternately, two weeks. They studied to please him by flattery, and in every little competition of strength or agility, by giving him the advantage, or yielding to his superiority. When the Indians agreed to make war on their white neighbors, this young Indian would secretly steal away and join them--his absence became a warning immediately to repair to the garrison. When they had made peace with the English, this young Indian would return and live with them; in this management he ignorantly became their protector. One day, while this young Indian was at work with our ancestor, he observed to the Indian, "I wonder they never attempted to kill me."

"Master, said the Indian, "I have cocked my gun many a time to shoot you, but I loved you so well, I could not."

At another time, on a Sabbath morning, while his wife and children had rode to meeting, several Indians came into his house, in a turbulent manner; he was apprehensive his life was in danger--he took his seat in the corner of the room, with his noted gun in his lap--this so terrified these cowardly intruders, they soon left the house. Their behavior within and without was such, he was convinced all was not right. He buried his money, and hid his most valuable things in the most secluded places. When his family returned from meeting, they prepared to go to the garrison--they started before it was really dark, they had not gone more than two miles, before the light of the devouring element, taught them the fate of their house. On his way to the garrison, he passed by the settlement of a Mr. Danson, in Middleborough, but he concluded not to go till early in the morning; he had rode but a short distance in the morning; when he stopped his horse to drink, this gave the Indians an opportunity, and they shot him. The rill where he was shot, is called Danson's brook. The next day, our ancestor sent his son John, with two others from the garrison, to the deserted farm, to take care of anything worth saving; in passing the hollow between the fort and where the Congregational Meeting House now stands, he discovered in the horse-path, a pair of leather shoes, and at a short distance further a beaver hat, which belonged to Danson. He considered them a decoy, and put his horse in full speed; when they returned neither of them were there.

The people who were capable of bearing arms, met and chose our ancestor their commander. He formed his men in a solid square, and there were four men in front, and four men deep. He applied to the Governor and Council at Plymouth for a commission; but they considered the company so small, gave him a general commission as Lieutenant commandant, not only of the field, but of the garrison, and all posts of danger. Thus commissioned, he equipped himself and company with a gun, a brass pistol, a sword and a halbert. The gun is supposed to have been brought into this country with them. It is of the following description: The whole length of the stock and barrel, seven feet, four and a half inches; the length of the barrel, six feet one inch and a half; the size of the calibre will carry twelve balls to the pound; the length of the face of the lock ten inches; the whole weight of the gun, twenty pounds, twelve ounces. The whole length of the sword three feet, five and a half inches; the length of the blade from the guard, two feet, eleven inches and three eighths. Hudebras has very accurately described this sword.

"For want of use it has grown
rusty,
And ate into the blade for lack
Of something for to hew and hack."

These two have descended to
apt. Zadock Thomson, of Halifax;

Capt. Jabez P. Thomson has the brass pistol; Capt. Asa Thomson has the halbert; the top part of the halbert is broken off--the present state is evidently not original. On the face of it is cut the date of the year when made, 1623.

At the commencement of Philip's war, in 1675, the Indians became so morose, the people in the month of June, fled for safety to the fort, which was built near what is called the Four Corners in Middleborough. The Indians would daily appear on the southeasterly side of the river, and ascend what is called the hand-rock, because there was the impression of a man's hand indented on it. There they would be in fair sight of the fort. Here the Indians would present the seat of honor to the people in the fort, and in an insulting manner would slap their hand on it. This they did for several days; there were thirty-five families in the fort, being all who had settled within the town. The people became tired of such daily insults; Lieut. Thomson ordered Isaac Howland, a distinguished marksman, to take his gun and shoot the Indian in the attitude of insulting them; this he did, by elevating his gun, and gave the Indian a mortal wound in that honorable part of the body presented to the fort in an insulting manner. Filled with revenge for their wounded companion, the Indians immediately took to the woods; running down the hill to the mill just below the fort, where the miller was at work--the miller discovered them coming, seized his coat and fled; he placed his coat on the end of a stick, as he ran through the brush to the fort: held the coat over his head, and suffice it to say, the coat was perforated with several balls, before he could arrive at the fort; then they burnt the mill. The Indians dragged their wounded companion two miles and three-quarters, to the deserted house of William Nelson, on the farm now owned by Major Thomas Bennet. The Indian died that night, his companions then buried him with their accustomed ceremonies, and burnt the house. In the year 1821, nearly one hundred and fifty years after the Indian had been buried, Major Bennet improved this spot of land, and plowing the same, he disintered some of his bones, a pipe, a stone jug, and a knife, all very much decayed, under the slow but all-devouring hand of time. Major Bennet actuated by a laudable design, went a few years past, and measured the distance from the old fort to the rock where the Indian was, and made the astonishing distance of 155 rods; nearly half a mile.

In the year 1677, John Thomson built a frame house near the same spot where the former house was burnt, and made a garrison of it. He cased all the outer posts, faced the joists in the inner side of the sills, and laid brick in mortar on the sills to the beams, and leaving a small window on each side to each room. This house occasionally underwent various repairs, and was the residence of the fifth generation. It was taken down in 1838, having been inhabited 160 years.

As yet we have only viewed the incidents of his life in relation to his worldly concerns. We ought not to pass in silence, the great object which led him to come into this country. His moral and religious character contains useful instruction to his descendants, and in many respects sharply reprove them for their degeneracy. His customary hour of rising in the morning was at 4 o'clock, especially on the Sabbath morning. The breakfast repast must be closed, even in summer, on or before the rising sun. He was a regular attendant on the duties of the sanctuary, and by his example he showed that he felt the sacredness of liberty of conscience, and was determined to improve it, as a precious gift of God. After he had made his clearing and moved into his log house, either he or his wife would go every Sabbath to Plymouth, the only place where they had an Elder to speak to them, a distance of more than thirteen miles. We have orally received information, that his wife, one year, on two of the Sabbaths in June, after breakfast took a child six months old in her arms, and walked to Plymouth, attended meeting, and returned home the same day.*

Nor were his children to the third generation less zealous of enjoying the happiness of sanctuary privileges. It was a common practice among them to make a cheese on Sabbath morning, in the summer, provided they could get it under the press before the sun arose, and then they would prepare to go to meeting. His grand children were regularly found among the worshipping assembly, on the Sabbath. It is stated, the children of Jacob, his son, started one Sabbath morning for Plymouth, they had to cross a dismal swamp, which lay between where Amasa

* Elizabeth, 1654.

Sturtevant now lives, and where Caleb Loring formerly kept a tavern. They arrived near the swamp before daylight, and were greatly frightened by the numerous howlings of the wolves—they climbed a large rock which was near Amasa Sturtevant's, and there tarried in fearful suspense till the sun arose.

Compare their zealous attachment to religious worship with those of the present day, and we should little suspect we were the children of such an ancestor. We certainly do not honor his character, or feel zealous to assimilate his piety. We feel it a burden to walk two miles to meeting instead of thirteen.

He closed his industrious and useful life, June 16th, 1696, nearly eighty years old. He was buried in the first burying ground in Middleborough. His grave remained undistinguished from others, except a very small stone which is said to be the second stone erected. Mary, his wife died March 21, 1714, in the eighty-eighth year of her age. Here he and his wife have silently laid nearly a century and a half. It would be an honorable act, which posterity might view with pleasing emotion, if some of his descendants, in token of respect, should erect a monument over his resting place.

His children were, Adam, John, Mary, Esther, Elizabeth, Sarah, Lydia, Jacob, Thomas, Peter, Mercy.

There was an incident relative to this man worthy to be left on record. At the commencement of the revolutionary troubles, a man by the name of Taylor deserted from the British army, and came and hired himself to his nearest neighbor. A British Sergeant with a file of men, came to take Taylor. They arrived about mid-day. As the officer was entering the front door, Taylor eluded them, by passing out the back way, and retired to a thick swamp. After a fruitless search, they concluded he was concealed in the neighboring house. Accordingly they entered the house in a violent manner, while the owner was at dinner, and in a vehement voice demanded Taylor—threatening to shoot him, if he did not comply. On this he laid down his knife and fork, and opened the bosom of his shirt to the officer. The officer sternly exclaimed, “deliver up Taylor, or I will shoot you,” putting his hand to his pistol. “Will you?” says this son of liberty, rising from the table, and taking hold of his gun, which hung over his head;

"We will see who will get the first fire." This brought the British officer to his senses. "I do not wish to harm you, all I want is Taylor." "Taylor is not to my knowledge in my house." The officer replied, "I shall search your house," turning to a door of a room. "Stop!" says the owner; "I have no objection to your searching my house, but you must first ask my leave."

After the revolution was closed, he settled himself and family in the town of Bridgewater in the State of Vermont. He was a Justice of the Peace; and died March 5, 1813. Priscilla, his wife, died April 9, 1839, in the eighty-ninth year of her age.

He was food to the hungry, a father to the poor, and a harbor even to the stranger. The two or three last days of his life, he seemed to be upheld only to speak forth the praises of God. This he kept doing by turns from Saturday to Monday evening. Sometimes he would be blessing God for his goodness; sometimes giving advice to his children and relations, or to those who visited him. The names of his children are lost to us. One of them is supposed to have been among the first settlers of Mendon. The rest went into the western part of Massachusetts. It is said they named the place where they settled, Petersham, in grateful remembrance of their great-grand father, Peter Thomson.

Sarah Thomson, the sister of John Thomson, was born April 17, 1744. She married Luther Keith.

Hannah Thomson, her sister, was born May 19, 1748. She died March 7, 1755.

James Thomson, the son of Peter Thomson the first, was drowned November 23, 1737, in Crossman's Pond in Kingston.

Hannah Thomson, the sister of James Thomson, married Nehemiah Bosworth.

The town of Mendon was first settled by an association of a number of persons in Braintree, Weymouth and adjoining towns. One of John Thomson's sons is supposed to belong to this association. They had the town surveyed, and each man's allotment made, before they attempted to settle in the place. This delay was designed as a precaution against an Indian invasion. It may be the Surveyors did not know the given name of all the association. They designated the lot drawn to this son of John Thomson, by the name of Goodman Thomson. It stands so on the town records of Mendon. The title of Goodman, is given to one or two more of this association. It may be remembered by some of the oldest persons, that those in early day, who were members of the church, were addressed by the title of Good, or Goodman.

One of those who came to Plymouth in the Mayflower, and who died that winter, was known by the name of Goodman. It may be in reference to him he was named.

It is said, after settlements were made in Boston and its vicinity, three brothers came to Boston by the name of Thompson—they were of Irish descent. Two of them settled north of Boston, and the third settled in Connecticut.

Thomas Thompson, who was one of the first settlers in Springfield, is probably the same, who is said to have settled in Connecticut. The celebrated Benja-son, (Count Rumford,) was born in Wob-Boston.

* Ebenezer Thomson was in both the French and American Wars. See page 27.
