PREFACE

Convinced that future generations will know little of an honorable ancestry unless some record is made of it, I have yielded to the solicitations of those interested and, in the face of the knowledge that others now living are much better qualified to do the work, have undertaken the task of arranging such data as could be readily procured into a brief narrative. And having put together, though in a fragmentary and disconnected way, the records, anecdotes and tributes that have come to hand from the several sources, I send the volume forth hoping its perusal will give the reader some measure of the enjoyment that its preparation has given me.

But before beginning this family history, I would express my gratitude to Aunt Hannah Tisdale, who years ago laid the foundation and gathered much of the material used herein; to Mr. H. W. Tisdale of Taunton, Mass., who permitted me to copy freely from the genealogical records in his possession; to Mr. D. C. Lillie of North Easton, and the numerous relatives and friends who have aided me in so many ways in the accomplishment of this purpose.

BOSTON, DECEMBER, 1909.

"The pride of family is as old as time and worth preserving. Any one familiar with the line from which he sprung, even though its men and women were only ordinary in ability and perhaps extraordinary in their endeavors to be upright, feels bound, if worthy the old stock, to at least keep honesty, thrift and such homely virtues very much in mind." * * * *

INTRODUCTORY

In attempting to bring together in their proper relation and sequence the various items and data concerning this branch of the descendants of John Tisdale, statements which seemed to conflict, or whose authenticity could not be fully established, have been omitted, and in this way much that is pleasant reading has been lost to us. But we may take a just pride in the homely virtues that have characterized our ancestry. No prominent or distinguished characters mark the annals of the family, yet integrity they cultivated as a principle, considering its possession of more worth than the praise of their fellow men. Sincerity and conscientious faithfulness to convictions of right and duty have been dominant factors in their lives, and we do well to honor them.

The following, taken from the genealogical records now in possession of Mr. Henry W. Tisdale of Taunton, Mass., seems to say all that can be truthfully asserted concerning public honors :

Of respectable origin, entirely free from the thralldom of illustrious reputation, having few claims to distinction from the possession of public or private honors, for upwards of two centuries members of the family have been residents upon the Pilgrim soil of New England. Industry, sobriety and just regard of character appear to have been among their distinguishing traits. Rural life and the pursuit of agriculture early lent its quiet repose to most of the name. An occasional seat as Deputy to the old Plymouth government by one of the name, the fragile honors of a county justice, and the more fragile honors of local office, a display of sword and baldric at the ancient military gatherings so frequent and popular in the towns of the colony, a church wrangle, then as now the fruitful source of much acrimony, with some patriotic zeal during the Old War and the Revolution, constitute the limited honors to which their descendants can lay claim.

No extended account of the Tisdales has ever been published. The family name is of ancient date. It was known in England early in the sixteenth century, and was rendered in various ways, but is now almost universally known as "Tisdale." Its origin has been ascribed to a connection with the River Tees, a stream of some magnitude rising in the north of England. Along its border for many miles this river is beautifully skirted with what are called "dale lands," and hence, as tradition goes, the creation of the name, Teesdale.

The English Tisdales have been represented as rigid Churchmen during the civil war in England, opposing the Protector and warmly devoted to the Crown. The origin of their arms beyond a doubt may be traced to the fact that King Charles II granted arms to many families who aided in the overthrow of Cromwell, or assisted in the Restoration.

"The General Armory of England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales," by Sir Bernard Burke, published in 1878, thus describes the arms of the Tisdales as worn by those of the name in Great Britain :

TISDALE OR TISDALL. Ar. a fess between three pheons, az.

Crest, a peacock's head coupé ppr.

TISDALL (Charlesfort, co. Meath, formerly of Dublin ; assigned by St. George, Ulster, 1679, to Michael Tisdall, Esq., J. P., co. Meath, and to his brothers, James, Thomas, John, Richard, and George Tisdall).

Sa, a thistle, or, betw. 3 pheons, points downward, ar.

Crest, out of a ducal coronet, or, an armed arm erect, holding in the hand an arrow, all ppr.

Motto — Tutantur tela coronam. (Weapons guard a crown.)

NOTE.—Lest others may have as little knowledge of heraldry as the compiler, the following definitions of abbreviations used in the foregoing descriptions are appended :

Ar. Silver, or white.

The fess is formed by two horizontal lines drawn across the field, comprising the central third part of the escutcheon, emblematic of a military girdle.

Pleon. The head of dart or arrow.

Az. Blue.

Couped. Term used when the head or limb of an animal, or when any other charge, is cut off by an even line.

Sa. Sable, black ; depicted by cross lines, horizontal or perpendicular.

Or. Gold, or yellow.

Ppr. Proper ; applicable to every animal, tree, vegetable, etc., when borne of the natural color.

FIRST GENERATION

Tradition has brought the first settler of the name in America from the town of Wales, in England, but no authentic record of the fact is known to exist. In 1854 an effort was made to ascertain the origin of the Tisdals in England, and for this purpose the aid of H. A. Somerby, an American gentleman long resident in Great Britain and a thorough-going antiquarian, was invoked. He found in Ripon, Yorkshire, a record of the baptism of John, son of Thomas and Ruth Tisdale, November 7, 1614, and this John is thought to be progenitor of the American name.

The precise date of John Tisdale's immigration to the Old Colony is not known, nor in what ship he arrived; but it is supposed to have been in 1636 or 1637. He first settled in Duxbury, or Marshfield, where he had a grant of ten acres at Green Harbor path; he also owned land at Hound's ditch and Namasakeeset, the sale of which to William Brett, in 1657, is duly noted in the colonial records. He was one of the twenty-six original purchasers of Freetown, and received the twenty-third lot, upon which a part of Assonet Village is located, and also possessed considerable land in Taunton.

In 1643 Plymouth, Duxbury and Marshfield combined in the organization of a military company, and John Tisdale's name appears in a "list of those able to bear arms in New Plymouth," under "Duxborrow, 1643."

In 1645 he was elected constable of Duxbury and held the office for several years. In Emery's "History of Taunton" we read that "the office of constable was one of great responsibility and honor in colonial times as representing the civil government and being the chief exponent of law. The most respectable and trustworthy persons were chosen to fill this office."

About 1650 John Tisdale removed to Taunton. Here he held some public offices: May 11, 1656, he was one of a coroner's jury of twelve men on a case reported in the old colonial records; a selectman in 1650 (?) and 1658; constable in 1655-1659; Representative to Plymouth General Court in 1674-1675; and seems to have been a person of no little importance in the community.

His home in Taunton was on the east side of Great River, some three and a half miles from "the Green," bordering upon what is now the northern boundary of the town of Berkeley, and overlooked Mount Hope, the home of King Philip. He incurred the displeasure of the Indians by his hearty espousal of every course of the English to keep them in subjection. As early as 1671, four years before the "Great War," his house was a rendezvous for the English troops and was thus in constant peril, and when the war came, in 1675, his property was destroyed and himself murdered. This is substantiated by the old colonial records: "John Tisdale was killed by Indians June 27, 1675."

John Tisdale married Sarah Walker, who came from London in the barque Elizabeth. She was the daughter of "Widow Walker," of Rehoboth. She was seventeen years of age when she reached America in 1635, and died in 1676. Children:

JOHN, b. about 1642.

JAMES, b. about 1644.

JOSHUA, b. about 1646.

ELIZABETH, date of birth unknown.

ABIGAIL, date of birth unknown.

SARAH, date of birth unknown.

JOSEPH, b. about 1656.

MARY, b. about 1658.

By John Tisdale's will the large real estate was given almost wholly to his sons, but a controversy arose between several of the sons-in-law with reference to the division of the property, which, "1 November, 1676," resulted in decrees of administration being "granted joyntly unto John Tisdale's sons, John, James, Joshua, and Joseph, to administer the estate of John Tisdale, Sr." This was settled in 1677, the eldest son taking a double portion, and the residue being equally divided among the sons and daughters.

THIRD GENERATION

CAPT. JOSEPH, JR., eldest son of Joseph and Mary (Leonard) Tisdale, and great-grandfather of Col. Israel Tisdale, was born in Taunton, in 1682. He married Ruth Reed, daughter of John Reed, of Taunton, March 13, 1706, and was prominent among men of his time, taking an active interest in church affairs.

In Emery's "History of Taunton" we find that Capt. Joseph Tisdale, with other Taunton men, petitioned the General Court of Massachusetts for the incorporation of a new town on the western bank of the Connecticut River, under the name of Township No. One, or New Taunton. This territory, now Westminster, Vt., was about six miles square, and situated a few miles south of the present town of Bellows Falls. On learning that the territory was not in Massachusetts, nearly all the incorporators sold their interests.

Capt. Joseph Tisdale died August 8, 1739, and was buried in the family lot on "the Plain," Taunton. "His widow, with commendable spirit, imported a pair of grave-stones, which now shadow his remains." — S. T. T., in Genealogical Records. She died August, 1748, aged 69 years. Children:

JOSEPH, b. 1706.

He married unknown, had son, JAMES, who married, had two sons, James, of Taunton, and Barney, of Elizabeth City, N. J. The former married unknown, had son, Samuel Trescott Tisdale, who compiled a very complete [to 1850] genealogy of the American Tisdales, which is in possession of his nephew, Mr. Henry W. Tisdale of Taunton.

CAPT. EBENEZER, fifth and youngest son of Capt. Joseph and Ruth (Reed) Tisdale, and great-grandson of John Tisdale, was born in Taunton, in 1723, and died in Easton, January 24, 1791. He received from his father a portion of the estate [about fifty acres] "that lay on Taunton Great River, near Blake's Landing, one-half of the Great Cedar Swamp, and two rights in the new township on the west side of the Connecticut River." From his mother he received, after her death, some pounds of "old tenor [colonial currency], a pair of Hand Irons, Brass Kettle and a trammel."

From Taunton Captain Tisdale removed to Stoughtonham [name changed to Sharon in 1783], a distance of thirteen miles, and called it "going into the country." Here he made a purchase of seven hundred acres, having sold his portion of the patrimonial estate in Taunton. He was a good citizen, distinguished for great energy of character, and possessing a genial and benevolent disposition. His home in Sharon was on the site afterwards occupied by that of his grandson, Col. Israel Tisdale.

The name of Ebenezer Tisdale appears, with rank of captain, on Lexington Alarm Roll of said Captain Tisdale's (Stoughtonham) company, which marched on the alarm of April 19, 1775, from Stoughtonham. Length of service, twenty-two days. He is said also to have acted as committee of inspection of correspondence during the Revolution, to the terror of all the Tories in the neighborhood.

About 1778 Captain Tisdale removed to the Bay Road, Easton, in which town he filled various important offices. He represented the town in the Massachusetts State Convention for the ratification of the Federal Constitution, January 9, 1788, and in 1789 was a member of the State Senate.

Capt. Ebenezer Tisdale married Priscilla Drake, a woman of remarkable strength, who weighed three hundred and sixty pounds, and is said to have been able to lift a barrel and drink from the bunghole. She died November 3, 1794, and was buried beside her husband in the little family burying ground on Mountain Street, Sharon.

COL. ISRAEL TISDALE
AND HIS DESCENDANTS

THE OLD HOMESTEAD    BUILT IN 1811 BY ISRAEL TISDALE

ISRAEL, son of Capt. Edward and Ruth (Harlow) Tisdale, was born February 24, 1780, the year of the "Dark Day," which occurred May 19, and was "so called on account of a remarkable darkness on that day extending over all New England. In some places persons could not see to read common print in the open air for several hours together. Birds sang their evening songs, disappeared and became silent; fowls went to roost; cattle sought the barnyard, and candles were lighted in the houses." Captain Edward, participating in the general alarm, and, in common with his neighbors, thinking the dreadful darkness portended the Day of Judgment, took his wife and family and hastened to his father's home, the "Tisdale Tavern," about a mile and a half away. The obscuration lasted the rest of the day, but with the rising of the sun the next morning the darkness had vanished, confidence was again restored, and the people resumed their customary occupations.

Israel Tisdale was industrious and ambitious even as a lad, and his father, who was kind, genial, and easy-going, depended largely upon him. It is told that when Israel was only thirteen years of age, his father informed him one day that they were out of provision and that he must attend to getting some. The boy immediately started for Ziba [or John] Drake's to get a bag of meal. In reply to his request Mr. Drake said, "I will trust you, but not your father," and took the lad's note in payment for the grain. After this they had dealings and settlements many times, but the note was overlooked for several years, when Mr. Drake accidentally found it one day, and on playfully mentioning the fact to Israel while the latter was returning from Boston, the money was paid over.

Another story indicative of the esteem in which Israel was held by the business men of neighboring towns is as follows: When he was nineteen years old his father bought what was called the "Widow Mace Williams place," afterwards known as the "Ped Pierce place," in Easton, for two thousand dollars. He paid one thousand at the time of purchase, promising the remainder by the first of April, and in case of non-payment was to forfeit the whole. This fact became known to Israel only when the note was due, but he forthwith went to Capt. Adam Kinsley of Canton and asked a loan. Mr. Kinsley took four thousand dollars from his pocket and said, "Take as much as you like; I am not afraid to trust you for any amount." Israel took one thousand dollars and went directly to Hingham, where he settled with Barnaby Lothrop for the farm. In the fall after the coaling season was over he had earned enough to cancel the debt, and after paying all expenses had four hundred dollars left.

He was a number of years collecting lumber and material to construct a house on the site of Capt. Ebenezer Tisdale's first dwelling, as that was fast going to decay. He commenced the structure in 1811, and so nearly completed the task that all the lumber necessary to finish it was in the building, and seven beds had been carried in ready for use. While at breakfast on the morning of August 13 a small fire was noticed in the north room. Upon seeing this Israel caught an armful of green shavings and threw on to smother the flames, when one of the workmen seized a rake and spread the shavings around the room, causing the fire to extend upstairs, and in an hour and a quarter the house was destroyed. An old chair and a few things of little value were all that remained. The carpenters lost all their tools, and seven out of nine went home bareheaded. Israel managed to save his private papers, but his whiskers were singed in the attempt. Relatives and friends interested themselves and advised him to rebuild. Gen. Shepard Leach, who was framing a house for himself of the same dimensions, kindly gave him the frame, and in six weeks the new house was completed. It remained in possession of the family until 1906, when it was purchased by Oakes Ames, son of ex-Gov. Oliver Ames, who, after remodeling, now occupies it.

About a mile to the west of Colonel Tisdale's home lived an aged couple, Mr. and Mrs. Zebulon Holmes. Upon the death of her husband, Mrs. Holmes was left in poverty; but that she might be spared the shame of the poorhouse,—that terrible disgrace in the eyes of the New Englander,—Colonel Tisdale took her into his family, and "Grandma Holmes," as she was called, although not of kin, was made comfortable and treated with respect as long as she lived.

In these later days it seems rather singular to read that Colonel Tisdale could not tell exactly how much land he owned, stating the amount at random, and after a few years learning that he was paying taxes on about a hundred acres more than he possessed. The narrator does not inform us how the matter was settled, but as the property was then valued at probably not more than one or two dollars per acre, his tax on it was not very great.

Like his antecedents, Colonel Tisdale was interested in electing the best men to public office. At one time a road surveyor was to be chosen in his district. A ticket or ballot was given him by Mr. Friend Drake, his next neighbor on the north, a man in whom the Colonel had great confidence. Without looking at it Colonel Tisdale cast the ballot, which was a vote for himself. He would not have cast it had he known it bore his own name, and was deeply chagrined. But he was the man for the place, and Mr. Drake knew it.

Early in life Israel Tisdale became interested in the military affairs of the country and was commissioned Ensign in Second Regiment, Second Brigade, First Division, September 4, 1805; promoted Lieutenant May 21, 1807; promoted Captain May 3, 1808; promoted Major June 20, 1810; promoted Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant June 14, 1811; discharged as Lieutenant-Colonel Commandant, Second Regiment, Second Brigade, First Division, February 20, 1813.

To quote from a newspaper clipping that is now yellow with age:

Col. Israel Tisdale was one of the best types of our large-hearted, thrifty New England farmers. His square, two-story farmhouse, with ample barns and sheds to house his stock and farming implements, indicated care and thrift. His home was a pleasant place to visit, where every one was sure to receive from him an old-fashioned hearty welcome. He was a man of portly presence, with a good-natured, jolly countenance that indicated a good liver and contentment with his portion.

He was noted far and near for the beauty of his team, the care of his stock, and the pride he took in having a good horse. It was worth a day's journey to see him on the road beside his team, dressed in his long homespun frock and broad-rimmed hat, as erect as a grenadier, and with long, polished whip stock which he carried in military fashion but seldom used, as his voice commanded his team. His huge oxen on the pole wore broad leather harnesses to keep the yoke from striking their horns in descending the hills, and these were kept as bright and clean as a coach harness. His horse on the lead was a white one, large and powerful, which seemed to realize the pride of his master in him, and carried his head a little to the left of his arched neck, as though he wished not to lose sight of his master's motions.

The following paragraphs, taken from letters written for publication in local journals, are here inserted by permission of the author, Mr. Daniel C. Lillie of North Easton, Mass., who for several years lived with Col. Jesse Pierce, and was thereby a neighbor of Col. Israel Tisdale, and consequently knows whereof he speaks.

Years ago Col. Israel Tisdale was a prominent and influential man in that neighborhood [the Bay Road, Easton]. He did not reside on the Bay Road exactly, but half a mile to the west. He was a fine man, of sterling sense, a good provider, a hard worker, a typical New England farmer, a thrifty and whole-souled man. He took great pride in his horses and cattle, in his rich and extensive meadows, his substantial walls, comfortable buildings and beautiful crops. His farm was a model of its kind; his commodious buildings were neat and kept in the primmest order; his cattle were sleek and fat, and of the choicest breeds; his horses and oxen were well trained and attracted attention whenever they appeared in public places. The stone walls that lined the highway and enclosed his fields were no tumble-down affairs, but built strongly and substantially and will defy the ravages of time for years to come.

Colonel Tisdale was a splendid man. He was stout, broad-shouldered and corpulent; was popular with all who knew him; good-natured, jovial, fond of a joke, and I have often seen his sides shake with laughter. In his younger days he was a colonel of militia, and I can imagine what a dignified and portly appearance he made dashing up and down the lines of his regiment, well mounted on a high-spirited and noble animal. He is said to have been a splendid rider. The men under his command were almost entirely farmers. At one time, it is said, his regiment was mustered in Sharon, and while manœuvring in the field he gave an order to one of the companies to "oblique to the right." The captain was either confused or misunderstood the order. The colonel, noticing it, rose in his stirrups and putting his spurs to his horse dashed up to the commander, shouting, "Gee off! Gee off there, I say!" Being farmers, they at once comprehended the order and moved off in the right direction.

Whatever Colonel Tisdale undertook to do, he did well. I cherish his memory and that of his faithful and devoted wife with profound respect. Standing by their graves the other day in the little rural, well-cared-for and substantially enclosed family cemetery on the borders of their farm and in sight of the house where they had reared their children and had passed so many happy hours, I thought what noble lives they had led, what good examples they had set, how kind and true and generous they had been; and their children and their children's children may well rise up and call them blessed.

Shortly after the publication of the foregoing, the following, written by a granddaughter of Colonel Tisdale, appeared in the Brockton (Mass.) Times:

TO MR. D. C. LILLIE:

A few weeks ago I received a copy of the Brockton Times containing an article in regard to the Colonel Tisdale farm in Sharon. Since reading the paper, I have been trying to find out who wrote that article, which was so truthfully told and so very kindly expressed, and now that I have learned I feel I want to thank you most heartily for the pleasure it has given me.

You may well believe me when I tell you that it takes me back many years in my life again. I can see how inviting the big yellow house, surrounded by the well-kept buildings, looked to my eyes when I was about to make one of my long visits to Grandpa and Grandma Tisdale. How warmly I was welcomed! How happy I was watching the many kinds of work done in those busy, busy days! The butter and cheese making; the "good things" that were stirred and mixed and baked and came out so tempting looking from the big brick oven! The joy it gave me to be asked to put the bright, clean milk pans in a long row "to sun" upon the bench in the back yard. I can recall so clearly the peace of those summer mornings, the sweet odor of the apple blossoms and glad song of wild birds in the orchard. Never has any meadow looked quite so beautiful as did that one stretching away in plain sight from the side door. How evenly the wood was packed in the ample woodshed just across the carriage drive! How the yellow corn would show through the cracks in the well-filled corn barn in the autumn! How good the warm milk tasted from my little mug, which was always on hand to be filled when the milk was being strained into the pans at night!

No fires have ever been quite so bright and glorious as those in the big fireplace that blazed and roared up the chimney and cast dancing shadows upon the walls of that big kitchen. Peace and plenty! I recall no other feelings but peace and happiness in that good, well-ordered home. I am so glad I have had these beautiful pictures in the "halls of memory" to enjoy all my life long. I feel so sorry for the man or woman who has never had the glad remembrance of happy visits to kind, good grandparents.

And now, Mr. Lillie, although I have no personal acquaintance with you, I cannot feel that you are quite a stranger to me, because you have seen and known of that old home, else you could not have written about it as you have, and it has done my soul good. How true it is that "we are sometimes gladdened by a fresh touch upon the strings of the harp of life. The sounding of a few old chords may soothe and comfort us, like the cradle songs of infancy." And so again I thank you for the sweet pleasure you have given me of again seeing through your mental vision, as well as my own, these well remembered, precious pictures of sixty years ago. Grandpa and Grandma Tisdale, a kind, honest man, and a sweet, saintly woman!

Most gratefully and sincerely,

MRS. LOUISE (MARSHALL) HEALEY.

These letters prompted the following, which was kindly loaned for publication :

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., March 5, 1909.

TO MR. D. C. LILLIE :

* * * In reading your letter in regard to the Tisdale farm, published in the Brockton Times, I was deeply interested in all you had to offer about it. I will inform you why. Sixty years or more ago it was my privilege to visit that farm for a day. I was ten or eleven years of age. It was my first visit on a farm. How well I remember it! I thought it the most beautiful place I ever saw, and it surely was. I remember the house and surrounding buildings, all nicely painted, and fine trees that gave shade from the sun's rays and made it nice and cool. And the green meadows in the distance containing many fine cattle and, as you well know, the finest horses in town or city. This view I well remember and it will always be a picture to my mind. I shall never forget it. Colonel Tisdale's teams were the finest that went over the highway from Taunton to Boston. I've no doubt you will remember that most every Sabbath Mr. Tisdale and some of his family went to the old church ["old Squaretop"] for Sunday service, and his horse always attracted a great deal of admiration. * * * * I am glad to revive such pleasant memories.

HENRY P. WAITE.

One of the few grandsons who personally knew Colonel Tisdale sends by request the following reminiscences :

My recollections of my grandfather, Col. Israel Tisdale, are the impressions received as a boy of five or six years while making long visits in his home, and may be of no value except to show his regard for a grandson.

As I remember him, he was a little above medium height, rather dignified in his manners, a stout and vigorous old gentleman, with dark eyes, heavy eyebrows, fair or sandy complexion, gray hair, closely trimmed side whiskers and a voice which seemed to me very powerful. Although having a colonel for a grandfather and a captain for a father, I suppose that, being a rather small and frail specimen of humanity, I did not do justice to my ancestry; and, as we stood on the old granite hearthstone before the big fireplace, Grandfather gave me lessons in the manual of arms and also in cultivating my voice, to develop which I was told to repeat these words after him :

“ The lion roars ! the woods resound !
The raging bull tears up the ground ! ”

I was instructed to “ holler it just as loud as you can,” until Grandma would mildly try to shut off the noise after it had become too distressing and tiresome to her, — and she may have had in mind the pupil also.

When he would hold me on his lap I would tell him how much I loved my “ old granther,” and by bushels and dollars only could be expressed an amount which would satisfy us both. Because of the great love I had for him I adopted his politics, and was a good Democrat when visiting him, although a Whig when at home.

One story I remember that has often been told of his dealing with a man who worked for him and who would occasionally get on a drunken spree. On one such occasion he told Grandfather that he wished he was dead, and asked if he [Colonel Tisdale] would chop his head off. The colonel told him to put his neck across a chopping block, which was done, and Grandpa rubbed the back of a coal rake across his neck a few times with the result of a speedy repentance and a promise to reform.

I have heard of Grandfather's athletic ability, and that it was a question once settled between himself and Oliver Ames which was the better wrestler, but according to an agreement between them the result was not made public. But he was a sturdy old gentleman who took pride in his good husbandry, and was in every way worthy of our affection.

HOWARD TISDALE MARSHALL.

A correspondent sends the following, told by one of Colonel Tisdale's sons :

When my father's gray horse, on which he always rode at a muster, was out in the lot with grass up to his eyes, father always gave him his regular feed of corn, or called on us boys to do it. He would often say in the summer : " Here, boys, have you given the gray horse his corn ? " We boys thought sometimes that he did n't need it, but if we said anything like that to father, the answer would be : " Boys, give that horse his grain. If I want to gallop down to Stimpson Williams's, I want the horse able to do it."

The correspondent adds :

As far as I can learn he never drove either horse or oxen fast, but always had them well fed.

Col. Israel Tisdale was twice married. December 1, 1801, he was united to Susannah, eldest daughter of Deacon Josiah and Susannah (Morse) Talbot, a most worthy woman, who well filled her position of wife and mother. She was born December 11, 1782, and died October 15, 1813. On December 1, 1814, Colonel Tisdale married her younger sister, Betsey, who was born June 14, 1790, and died September 13, 1860. A sweet and lovely woman, she exemplified those noble and endearing virtues which made her a loving companion and a most tenderly loved and respected mother.

Colonel Tisdale died March 24, 1852, and with his two wives is buried in the old family cemetery in Sharon. After her husband's death, his widow, with her daughter Hannah, removed to Cochesett, West Bridgewater, and there spent the remainder of her days. The following was published in a local newspaper at the time of her death:

DIED, in West Bridgewater, September 13, 1860, Mrs. Betsey, widow of the late Col. Israel Tisdale, aged 70 years. When the good pass away it is well for the living not only to note the event, but to enshrine the memory of their virtues in the heart. This truly Christian woman, by a cheerful serenity which ever beamed in her countenance, gave sweetness to her voice and manifested itself in all her acts during a long and useful life, has truly endeared herself to all who knew her. As a wife, mother, sister and friend, she had few superiors. In view of her influence in the home circle, her husband might well be excused for saying that he expected no happier home in heaven. She leaves a large family and circle of friends to cherish her memory and look forward to the heavenly reunion.

CONCLUSION

Here the story must end until sufficient material shall have accumulated for its continuation. In order that each family may keep an accurate record of the births, marriages, and deaths within its midst, blank pages are inserted at intervals, and it is hoped that in due time these will be filled, and thus the work of a future historian be greatly facilitated.
