AN ADDRESS TO THE PARISHIONERS OF GREAT CHOPTANK

The Vestry considering themselves responsible to the Parishioners for their conduct, and feeling their dependence for supplies to enable them to comply with their contracts, think proper to submit to them an account of their conduct in the important business of building the new Church. Their view in doing this, is to convince those who from a superficial observation may have been disposed to censure them, that they have had many and great difficulties to encounter; and also to induce the parishioners in general to come forward and divide an expence, which, it would be extremely improper, should fall on a few individuals.

As long ago, as the year 1788, the vestry appointed a committee of their body, to examine the old church, in order to repair it if it was found capable of being repaired; if not, to form a plan for the building of a new one. The report of this committee was in the following words "that ye state of the Old Church was so wretched and ruinous, that it would scarcely be possible to accommodate the Parishioners, but by the building of a new one, and that all expenses employed in repairs would be money actually thrown away". Notwithstanding this opinion of the Vestry, several of the Parishioners, who were considerable proprietors in the Old Church still insisted that it might be repaired. In this situation, it would have been in vain for the Vestry to have attempted to carry their plan into execution. They were therefore obliged to relinquish it, and wait until time should produce more unanimity among the Parishioners on this subject.

In the year 1791, when the old Church began to fall down piece by piece, around our ears, and when the opposition to the building of a new one had been relinquished by most, the Vestry issued a Subscription Paper for the purpose of building a new one, upon such a plan as the subscribers should themselves agree upon. It was soon found that all the money that could be raised by subscription would be very inadequate to end intended. The Vestry therefore saw no other alternative but to apply to the assembly to grant them power to sell some vacant lots which they held in Cambridge. This, it must be acknowledged, was a step which nothing but necessity could justify. But to sell these lots was deemed a much less evil than to drop the expectation of having a church, for without a church, the lots would have been of little use to the Parish. A Lottery had been tried in vain, and the lots were now the only resource.

The subscribers met and agreed upon some fundamental conditions upon which the building should be erected. It then remained with the Vestry to purchase materials and engage workmen. In doing this, the ruling principle was, to have the work well done. In a building for the purpose of religious worship, which they hoped themselves nor their successors would never relinquish, durability was the principal object. It might therefore be expected, that when a workman offered, recommended as inferior to none in the State of Maryland, they would receive him with such eagerness as sometimes excludes sufficient precaution. Their contract with their workman consequently has been urged against them, as having been made with too little caution. And yet this objection they will allow to be well founded only on the supposition that that class of men are generally devoid of property. Those who are acquainted with the difficulty of men transacting business in bodies, will make due allowances for any improprieties that may have appeared in the conduct of the Vestry. They lay no claim to infallibility in judgment, but they will presume to assert that the whole tenor of their conduct has had a friendly aspect toward the benefit of the Parish. And on such an occasion they may without vanity, claim some merit for the difficulties, thro' which they have struggled. The first of these was the raising money by subscription. This has really so much the appearance of begging, that those who undertake it are liable to have their feelings frequently hurt, and sometimes to be even little less than insulted. The next difficulty that occurred, was the collecting of money from the subscription to purchase materials and supply their workmen with cash, whose demands were very urgent and frequent. This was really a difficulty of great magnitude: so much so that the Vestry were once obliged to borrow money, and at another time to advance it out of their own pockets. Their credit as a body, owing to the irregularity of their pecuniary supplies, was sometimes so questioned, that they were obliged to come forward and stake their credit as individuals otherwise the work must have stopped. The Vestry however in asserting these facts, do no mean to throw indiscriminate blame on the subscribers. That some subscribed with generosity and paid with punctuallity, it would be both untrue and ungrateful to deny. Another difficulty, and one which at first was not apprehended, was to settle with their workman. His account against the Vestry was such, that they thought they could not in justice to the Parishioners, allow it. They therefore agreed to leave it to arbitration. This agreement not having been carried duly into effect, and the bill brought in appearing very unreasonable, the Vestry determined to leave the final settlement of the business to a jury of their fellow citizens. The result of this is that a sum far exceeding their expectations and also their funds has been recovered against them. And they have no other recourse but to apply to the Parishioners for assistance. The sum recovered is £293, besides the cost. The vestry have notes to the amount of £90 with a balance due on the subscription of about 30 or 40 pounds. But on this little can be calculated, as several of the subscribers are dead and others removed. From this statement it appears that about £200 and perhaps more will be wanting to answer every demand.

The Vestry have presented this view of the business, not upon a presumption, that the Parishioners will refuse to bear their respective parts of the burden, for such a presumption would be an insult upon common honesty, but to show the difficulties, that they have had to encounter and the foundation upon which they rest their farther claims. They are likewise aware that avarice is a very strong passion, and that those who are much under its influence will be very apt to patch up excuses of some kind or other to save their money. But let it be remembered, that the Parishioners of Great Choptank Parish are now in possession of a neat and commodious church, well built and of good materials, that this church with a little care will remain to them and to their children for two or three generations: that the benefits and consolations derived from it will be common to all the congregation and that therefore it would be extremely improper that so large a part of the expence should fall upon two members of it. The sum will be light and easy to the whole, and such as they can never miss.

But lest there may be some who may not consider this business in a right view, let us advert to the consequences of a refusal on the part of the Parishioners. One consequence, undoubtedly would be, that in future, we should have no vestry at all or if we had, they would be so cautious as to be of little use. Then the Church would be neglected, and perhaps soon become a lodging place for the beasts of the field and the birds of the air. The expense which the Parishioners have already borne would be lost, and in a short time we should be reduced to such a state as to be early led away by the delusions and dreams of Fanatics - for this has generally been the result of a long supineness in religion.

In taking a general view of the state of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Maryland it has been remarked with pleasure, that the Congregation at Cambridge, were rising from the melancholy state of depression to which too many had unhappily sunk. In proof of this it was said, that they had built a church, neat, tho' plain, suited to the worship of a rational and enlightened people. But soon indeed will a (cloud?) intercept this gleam of prosperity, if any difference should arise between the Vestry and Parishioners. It may be farther remarked, that a refusal on the part of the Parishioners in this case, would actually amount to a violation of one of the fundamental principles of society. For in all societies the acts of the representative body are considered as binding on the constituents. It is true in most representative bodies, there is a power to enforce a compliance with their acts. The want of this power in Vestries does not render the obligation less binding or less sound in a religious view. For in all matters of religion the appeal is not to power but to conscience and to Heaven.

The Vestry therefore flatter themselves, that the Parishioners when they reflect that altho' the Vestry may have committed some errors, yet they have encountered many difficulties, and that the results of the labors is a most excellent Church, they will cheerfully contribute to relieve them from their present embarrassment.
