PREFACE.

UPON the generally accepted fact that that portion of the great Queen City of the West known as Brighton—both the Brighton of to-day and that of bygone years—furnishes more interesting and important historical facts and traditional memories, and takes the present generation back to the primitive days more vividly and to better advantage than any other specific locality in or about the city, the value of this work is calculated.

The authenticity of the facts herein set forth may be relied upon, as special efforts have been put forth to thoroughly verify each and every statement. Various histories of Cincinnati have been consulted and conversations have been had with many pioneers whose memories are trustworthy and reliable. No available source of information has been left unsearched and no effort spared to produce a work that should satisfy the expectations of those interested in the past, present and future of Brighton.

Beginning with the earliest that Brighton had to do with history, her settlement, the hardships, trials and peculiarities of the people of the frontier period, the advancement, growth and development until she has been transformed into a busy, wealthy, prosperous and progressive commercial and industrial community, this book has been made and is presented for the good it may do in perpetuating treasured traditions, and by linking the past with the present and the future.

COASTIN' DOWN BAYMILLER.

(By JACOB HOFFMANN.)

I tell you boys, t'was lots of fun
In the good old days gone by,
As with our sleds we used to run
Out in the cold and snow so high,
To go coastin' down Baymiller.

There were sleds of every kind and size ;
Some painted red and some of them blue ;
Each one to it's owner a treasure, a prize,
As merrily shouting "Heigh-ho," we flew
A kitin' down Baymiller.

The Allen boys each one had a sled ;
There were Johnny and Patsey, you know ;
Their little flat carts o'er white, snowy bed,
With frolicsome burden, cheeks all aglow,
Came a slidin' down Baymiller.

The Felix's (Charley, Ed, Billy and Lou).
Patriotic it looked, with national shield,
And big enough for a family or two,
When to such sport inclined to yield
As ridin' down Baymiller.

Tony Sauer and John, Jack Faeth, Jack Kresz,
The Muth, the Loesch and the Deremo boys,
The Jungs and the Odenbachs, happy none less,
Came fully equipped to share the joys
Of whizzin' down Baymiller.

Baums there were three (George, Henry and Eddie)
And then the Panceras (Jake, Charlie and Joe),
The Decks and the Bickenhausers ever were ready,
So too, the O'Learys and Welshes to go
A spinnin' down Baymiller.

Olie Maas and the Meisters (Paul, George and Chris),
The Kabels and Duffys were there from the start,
The Oelgoetzes, Reynolds' and Scheeses ne'er missed
Showing up in time to take their part
In whirlin' down Baymiller

Lou Reehl and the Dreyers (Alfred and Fred ,
Gus Hanson, Fritz Maegley, like all true boys,
The Taubalds, the Ritzers and Schaurers all sped
Through health-giving space, with good-natured noise
A rollin' down Baymiller.

Talk about your dumb-bells and Gym' !
We none of us needed them then ;
We kept our brawn and brain in trim
By running and shouting, and again and again
A flyin' down Baymiller.

HISTORIC BRIGHTON.

Sweet clime of my kindred, blest place of my birth—
The fairest, the dearest, the brightest on earth,
Where'er I may roam, howe'er blest I may be,
My spirit instinctively turns unto thee.

RIGHTON, as a factor in history, was one of the rudiments in the making of Cincinnati. The memory of man to-day scarce goes back to the time when Brighton was not. It stands to-day one of the potent elements of the great industrial and commercial city, a monument to the thrift, energy and pluck of the men who have been its children and who have contributed to its progress from the day of its inception down to the present time.

The history of Brighton goes back beyond the beginning of the century we have just left behind. It was in the latter part of the eighteenth century that the foundation was laid. Then was the beginning of the crude life of the brave and heroic frontiersman, whose battles and labors have born fruit that is just ripening for the enjoyment and benefit of the present-day generation. They sowed seed in rich soil the growth of which is now to be harvested.

Col. John Riddle, a New Jersey immigrant, was the first settler of Brighton. Westward bound he made his way to this section and early in 1790 secured employment shoeing horses in the garrison at old Fort Washington. It was later in the same year that he purchased of Judge Symmes a section of land two miles northwest of the village. This was one of the early land transactions, the consideration for the transfer being 67 cents per acre. One corner of the track purchased by Riddle was near the site of the old Brighton House. In 1793 he built a house on what is now Alfred Street, where he settled and later erected what was until a few years ago known as the Riddle homestead.

It was here that the Riddle family endured for years the hardships of the early life of the new territory and experienced many sensational encounters with the hostile Indians, who abounded in such numbers and were so troublesome that the government found it necessary to establish a block-house for the protection of the settlers and travelers. This block-house was one of the earliest public institutions in this part of the country. It stood on the ground that was afterward known as Millward's Circle, where was erected by an Englishman named Millward a large circular building, which was operated as the first malt house in this section. The property later became known as the Renner Malt House, located on Colerain Avenue.

The early possessions of Col. Riddle comprised a vast domain. He was literally monarch of all he surveyed. The boundaries of what he laid claim to, and rightfully, were Mill Creek, Clifton Avenue, Harrison Avenue, Riddle Road and Center Street. This formed a great acreage of wild and barren waste.

This was before the days of public highways and made thoroughfares and what was afterward Hamilton Road, now McMicken Avenue, was at that time an almost indiscernible Indian trail, which had its origin at a point near the present site of the Court House, which was at that time the northern terminus of Main Street. The trail extended northerly to about the present intersection of Main Street and McMicken Avenue and thence north and west through the Mohawk settlement, which is now Mohawk Place.

At this point, after the construction of the Miami Canal in 1826, a wooden bridge spanned the canal, beyond which the trail was conjoined by another which was later made a highway known as Western Row, now Central Avenue. This led on to the present Colerain Avenue, continuing thence to Hamilton, forming the original route survey of Hamilton Road.

The first settlement of Mohawk goes back beyond the recollection of anyone living today. Its earliest history has been obliterated by time. While the work of the construction of the canal was in progress during the first quarter of the nineteenth century the settlement experienced what would now be called a boom, its population being materially increased. Evidences of its antiquity were found recently in excavations for new buildings there, where were found fragments of an old tombstone upon which was discernible an inscription of the date of 1822.

Bull Head Tavern was the one notable public resort in the early days of the Mohawk settlement. It was conducted by a man named Dobson and was the general stop-over place of all travelers going that way. The old building, which long ago bore the marks of the ravages of time, stands where afterward was located Wuest Bros.' wagon works. Near this tavern was the business place of A. T. Wirliams, which was the peculiar combination of wagon shop and grocery. It was here that many of the settlers were wont to gather and spend their leisure hours. On the other side of the tavern was a general store owned by Captain James Brown. In the near neighborhood Jacob Renner conducted a slaughter house.

John Fieber was one of the big men of that day. He owned a pork killing establishment the capacity of which was one hog a day. The output was made by the proprietor, who, after dressing the hog, would take it to market on a wheelbarrow. William Reynolds, grandfather of Robert R. Reynolds, President of the Ice Delivery Company, was the village blacksmith, and Edward Stewart was a carpenter who built many of the houses in the settlement, some of which are still standing.

One of the well remembered features here was a treadmill propelled by a big dog and a wolf to pump water to supply the tannery of Joshua Gibbons, which was located about where is now the corner of Clarkson street. The dog and the wolf tread the mill during the whole of the working day furnishing the entire water supply for the plant which was in those days considered of great proportions.

Brighton proper of the early days was located at the intersection of Harrison and Colerain Avenues, where a number of small houses comprised the settlement. At the northwest corner was located the Zenith Inn, a hostelry of wide renown; owned and managed by Zenith Johnson, a Yankee. It was an architectural monument of its day, plain, simple but substantial, built of brick, two stories high and contained about ten rooms. History fails to tell when this structure was built, but it had stood through the storms of many scores of winters when it gave way to the Brighton House, which afterward became one of the most notable and far-famed hotels in the land.

In its day the Zenith Inn was the center of the compass in the estimation of the inhabitants and for their calculations. It was the point from which all measurements and considerations were made. Many of the property deeds executed in the early days describe the property transferred as being so and so many feet, more or less, north or south, etc., from Zenith Johnson's Inn. At this time Harrison pike ran on the north side of the inn.

Up to about the year 1840 much of the land property for miles around Brighton was owned by but a few men. John Riddle's holdings had been but little divided, if at all; and Samuel J. Browne, from whom Browne Street, now McMicken Avenue, derived its name, owned about 20 acres located on the north side of the canal, extending to the brow of Brighton Hill. His residence was located about the center of his possession, where now stands the Twenty-eighth District school building. A large tract lying between the canal, Mohawk bride, Bank Street and Baymiller Street was held by Curtis and Avery, and Daniel Gano owned all the land between Baymiller Street, Freeman Avenue, Hamilton Road and Bank Street, while John W. Coleman, from whom the street derives its name, laid claim to the tract bounded by Bank Street and Western Row or Central Avenue, Kindel Avenue and Riddle Street.

During the first decade of the century Major Charles Clarkson was the owner of a large tract of land lying south of Bank Street, which he purchased from the Trollop family, and upon which stood the residence afterwards occupied by the Clarksons. This house is still standing on Bank Street, directly opposite Clarkson Street, and is one of the oldest landmarks about Brighton. In ye olden time this was a mansion and an architectural wonder, and is remembered by many as having at one time been a school building.

The whole of what is now Clifton was owned by Major Clarkson and named by him the Clarkson Clifton farm, hence the present name of the beautiful hill-top suburb. This was the finest stock breeding farm west of the Alleghanies and was known far and near.

Cincinnati began to show signs of growth and development early in the forties, at which time the corporation line was extended from Liberty Street and Western Row to include all the territory east of Millcreek and south of Alfred Street. This was the first annexation of which there is any historical record and brought Brighton into the city. This change and the fact that the best avenues of travel leading into the city passed through Brighton brought many investors and speculators to this section. As a result real estate and other values went up and there was considerable of a boom.

The early forties witnessed the crude beginning of what afterward developed into the great pork packing industry that thrived in this locality. Clearwater Creek, having its origin in the Mohawk ravine, was a small stream running between Bank Street and Hamilton Road and emptying into Millcreek. Many butchers and tanners established their plants here, erecting buildings along the bank of the creek, many of which are still standing. With these killing houses in operation, the offal from which was emptied into the stream the name was soon changed to Bloody Run.

The Clearwater distillery was located on the bank of this creek in a hollow, back of Weiss' pork house near Bank Street and Freeman Avenue, about 1845.

Brighton gave Cincinnati the name of "Porkopolis," and it was this little creek that afforded the opportunity for this section to become famous as the greatest hog and cattle killing locality in the country. The industry grew and expanded until later it became the chief one of the city. It was during the latter part of the first half of the century that the 6 per cent. (Non-Taxable in Ohio) Andrew Jergens Co. 6% Preferred Stock.

The securities of the above company rank among the best for purchase as an investment ever offered in the Cincinnati market.

The concern was organized in 1894, as Andrew Jergens & Co., to engage in the manufacture of soap of a high grade.

From the start it has been markedly successful and has greatly increased its business and profits each year. The net profits for the past five years have averaged between $60,000 and $75,000 annually.

This was accomplished while paying each year a large sum in royalties, under which the Woodbury Facial Preparations have been marketed by this Company up to the present year, 1901. The advertising and sale of these preparations, Facial Soap, Facial Cream and other Dermatological articles, has been one of the concern's most successful undertakings.

The present Company, Andrew Jergens Co., was incorporated July, 1901, under the laws of the state of New York, with an authorized capital stock of $1,250,000 of which $400,000 is Preferred Stock and $800,000 is Common Stock. Officers and Directors as follows (each officer being a Director): Andrew Jergens, President; H. F. Jergens, Vice-President; Chas. H. Geilfus, Secretary and Treasurer; Robt. C. Eastman, all of Cincinnati and Robt. Buggeln, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Common Stock has never been offered for sale, although the bid price has increased from 105 to 120 in the past thirty days.

$200,000 of the Preferred Stock is held in escrow by the Trustee, The Provident Trust Co., and cannot be sold until two years from July, 1901.

The balance of the Preferred Stock was offered for subscription in July, 1901, and all taken up within twenty-four hours from the hour set.

With the proceeds of this sale the Company has purchased outright all right and title in the Woodbury Preparations, thus effecting a saving in royalties alone sufficient to more than pay the interest on the total amount of the issue of the Preferred Stock.

The Company is earning a net profit fully five times a sum sufficient to pay all its expenses and fixed charges.

The concern has no debts of any character and discounts all of its purchases for cash.

This Company's business and profits are ever increasing, evidencing highly competent management and enhancing its financial value as a security.

Price to net about 5¼ per cent. For sale by first business rivalry sprung up that fostered the industry. This was between Clearwater and Coleman. Each tried to outdo the other in the number of hogs killed. Both sent agents out among]raisers to contract for the killing of their droves. These contracts where frequently made while the hogs were being driven to town, the agents meeting the drovers en route.

The work of killing and dressing was done at so much per head and the offal. The dressed meat was taken by the owners to various packing houses and disposed of by the pound. Others later came into this competition, among whom was Baz Blackburn, whose slaughter house occupied the present site of the Germania Brewery.

George and Peter Bogen erected and operated as a pork house the building now occupied by Sayers & Scovill, on Colerain Avenue, the building and pens occupying all the ground between the Brighton House, Colerain and Harrison Avenues and Bogen Street. This was at that time considered the most complete slaughtering and packing plant in the United States. The Banner Packing company of Evans, Lippencott & Cunningham and the James Morrison Packing Company put up immense establishments about this time, the latter still being in operation. Besides these there were possibly one hundred smaller concerns located within the so-called Brighton district, among the owners of which where J. A. and William Gall, James See, Thomas Donohue, Daniel and Vanaken Wunder, Nicholas Wolf, John Butcher, John Graybehl, and others who came later and of whom mention is made elsewhere.

The rivalry reached a climax when Coleman succeeded in killing 2,000 hogs in one day. This fact was heralded the country over, and it was considered that the industry had reached its zenith. Then it was that Cincinnati began to be known as the greatest hog and pork center in the country. Men rushed into the killing business, capital was invested in establishments, buyers were sent out to gather in hogs, which were for the first time in the history of the local market purchased by the pound on foot, killed, dressed and packed for sale and shipment. Thus began "Porkopolis".

Up to 1840 but few houses had been built on the Hamilton Road between Clarkson Street and Freeman Avenue. The Brighton Volunteer Hand Fire Company, composed of public-spirited citizens, was located from 1850 to 1853 where now stands the building occupied by the Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Company.

On the opposite corner of Hamilton and Larabee Bridge Roads was the home of the Enyart family, which was one of the first houses in this vicinity, having been built in 1832, and is now one of the oldest in Brighton. A portion of the adjoining property was used by Jacob L. Enyart as a pork packing establishment. The double frame building now No. 2006 was built in 1840 and the brick building in 1849. from the pork packing business Mr. Enyart conducted a grocery in the premises until he lost his eyesight in 1880, six years before his death.

North of the Enyart property Major Charles Larabee owned $7\frac{1}{2}$ acres of land between the present Ravine street and Samuel J. Browne's home, extending from the canal to the top of the hill. Mr. Browne afterward added this land to his possessions. A foot bridge crossed the canal at this point, hence the name Larabee Bridge Road, which has remained unchanged to this day. It has the distinction of being the shortest street in Cincinnati, being only 146 feet long or about three and one-half times as long as it is wide, the survey width being 40 feet. There are but two owners of property abutting on this street, R. F. Enyart on one side and the William C. Kennett estate on the other. A short distance west of the Enyart property on Hamilton Road was the blacksmith shop of Daniel Jung, later a member of the brewery firm of Weyand & Jung, the founders of the present Jung brewing company.

What may properly be called Cincinnati's first water-works was located in this vicinity. While not a part of the municipal government it was a sort of quasi-public institution. This water supply plant was simply a well in front of Paul Untereiner's tavern. From it water was supplied to the entire neighborhood. A rental or royalty for the use of the water supply of ten cents per month was charged by the owner. The adequacy of the service afforded was commensurate with the charge made for it as the patrons had to come to the well with buckets, jugs, etc., draw the water from the well and carry it to their homes and places of business. Later the plant was improved by the addition of a pump. Another source of water supply in the early days was the canal, the water being conducted in lead pipes. This water, however, was used chiefly for watering the horses of the travelers, etc.

At this time there were but two houses west of the Brighton House. One was a tavern known as the Barnard House, built about 1827. The building still stands on Harrison Avenue, near the railroad tracks, and is occupied by John Post, a pioneer, whose place is accredited with being the oldest saloon in Cincinnati, he having been in business in the same building 44 years. Mr. Post is today a well known character as he has failed to keep pace with the progress of the times in the conduct of his business and the methods he employs are relics of the primitive days and altogether interesting to the present day generation who chance to visit his place. The other building was the Truesdale property, owned by Thomas, Robert and Joseph Truesdale. It is still standing on Bogen Street.

Daniel Gano, who for many years was prominent in the public eye, and owned the tract of land on the south side of Hamilton Road, raised a grove of mulberry trees for the purpose of propagating silk worms. This industry proved a failure and the grove afterward became known as "Buffalo Patch" the name being derived from the fact that Mr. Gano installed there a small herd of buffalo.

Though ridiculed for his eccentricities, he was esteemed and honored by all who knew him, being frequently placed in positions of trust and responsibility. He served thirty consecutive years as clerk of the county and Superior Court. It was Daniel Gano who owned the four handsome white horses which drew the carriage in which General Lafayette rode in the big parade following the public reception tendered him by the citizens upon the occasion of his visit to Cincinnati in 1825.

Mr. Gano lived for more than 20 years in a large frame house which stood about in the center of his possessions. In 1844 he transferred to the Sisters of the Good Shepherd all the property now occupied by the convent and church on Bank Street. He was known by every man, woman and child in the city on account of his peculiarities of dress. Up to the time of his death in 1873 he wore a wig with a long cue such as adorned the heads of the patriots of the revolutionary times. Stephen Gano, Sr., the well known attorney of the city, now in his 83rd year, a son of Daniel Gano, was about 12 years of age when his parents first occupied this old homestead.

The traditions of the Millerites have to do with the history of Brighton back in the early forties, as they selected Brighton Hill as the point from which to make their ascent to Heaven. This strange religious sect claimed to believe that on a certain day in June, 1843, they were all to leave the earth and worldly things behind and ascend to Heaven. Elaborate preparations were made for the ascension day, many of the faithful and devout believers giving away their property.

A platform was erected on the highest summit of Brighton Hill, upon which a vast concourse assembled at daylight on the morning of the eventful day, dressed in their ascension robes. The entire day was spent in calm and patient waiting for developments, but when the shades of night gathered there had been none. The would-be ascensionists continued to inhabit the earth along with their fellow beings. Sadly disappointed they returned to their homes and soon took up the daily tasks of life, which has previously been forsaken and repudiated by many of the followers. Little was heard of the Millerites after this.

The slope of Brighton Hill to the canal bank, thus marked for a chapter in history, and in many places to the edge of the old Hamilton Road, was covered with a dense forest of beech, walnut, hickory, ash and other trees. The forest continued on the south side of the road to the Sand Hill Bluff at Dayton Street, and abounded in wild turkey, pigeon and other small game. South and west of Bank Street as far as Findlay Street the bottom land not covered by Millcreek was utilized for the cultivation of vegetables and corn.

The Millcreek bottoms extended to Dayton Street and during the early days there stood on the site of the present Fourth Intermediate School a little frame school house. Here it was the youths of Brighton of that time were given the rudiments of their education and many of the early Brightonians who are living to-day well remember the picturesque view from the windows of that school house to the Ohio River unobstructed save by two or three small farm houses.

About the middle of the century Brighton boasted of four of the largest distilleries in the country and came to be known far and near because of the amount of whisky and proof spirits distilled. The Gaff distillery occupied the building where is now conducted the business of the James Morrison Packing Company, the White Mills distillery, owned and operated by Coon & Co., was located on Western Avenue in a building now used as a carriage factory, the Clearwater distillery was near the intersection of Bank Street and Freeman Avenue and the Queen City Distillery was situated in the high lands north of Queen City Avenue and owned by A. H. Smith. The latter was at that time the largest in the United States.

Most of the corn used by these distilleries was shipped by boat on the canal. Merchandise of all kinds was shipped out by boat and upon the return trip they would carry cargos of hogs, cattle, corn, wheat, cordwood, etc. This made the Brighton landing one of the most important and active along the entire line of the canal. As a result of this there accumulated in the neighborhood a goodly number of rather undesirable characters among the roustabouts, laborers, drivers and drovers and for a time Brighton was stigmatized with the reputation of being a tough locality. John Schatzman and Robert Reynolds, the only two policemen in the territory comprising Brighton for ten years, however, coped with this element and were successful in keeping it well in restraint. The police of this day were elected by the people and Schatzman and Reynolds were chosen consecutively every year, from 1845 to 1855.

It was about this time that the Brighton Stock Yards were established by a company, at the head of which was J. M. Coleman. Extensive pens were erected and continually added to in order to meet the demands of the rapidly increasing business in the traffic of cattle and hogs until the yards occupied the entire space bounded by Hamilton Road and Harrison Pike on the north, Bank Street on the south, Kindel Avenue on the east and Riddle Street on the west. The fame of "Porkopolis" contained to spread, and farmers, raisers, drovers, herders and dealers from all parts of the country, learning that better prices obtained in the Cincinnati market than elsewhere, came here in such numbers as to give an unprecedented impetus to trade and business of every character. The whole city took on a boom and everywhere substantial buildings were erected.

The influx of stock men created an urgent demand for hotel and lodging accommodations not provided and the establishment of the famous and historic old Brighton House was the result. The Zenith Inn, which was conveniently located, was purchased by the Stock Yards Company and rebuilt, making way for the historic Brighton House. It at once became popular and for years was one of the busiest and most active places in Cincinnati.

The Brighton House was for a number of years conducted by Anthony Hummell and later was under the management of Lew Bowman, who gained an enviable reputation as a host and entertainer. In the course of time gaming became general in the house. Poker and other games were in full blast nightly in all parts of the house and the attractions of so general and varied a character drew men of all classes until finally the neighborhood was invested with objectionable characters.

These conditions continued and grew steadily worse until about the latter part of 1859, when citizens in the neighborhood became aroused to action and decided to take matters in their own hands. At this time there was formed a vigilance committee and it started a war on recklessness and the perpetrators with a vigor, earnestness and determination that at once promised its success. There was to be no sparing, and heroic measures were at the outset employed.

Through the bravery, heroism and determination of these men the offenders were finally put to rout and lawlessness was reduced to a minimum. Peace and order was restored and Brighton started on a new era of improved morals and bettered conditions, freed of the objectionable characters who had so long infested and terrorized the neighborhood.

It was in 1857 that the City Passenger Railroad Company came into existence and opened the way for improved facilities of transportation to the city. The incorporation was formed for the purpose of laying tracks and operating horse cars through the streets of Cincinnati. The first advance made by the company was to secure a grant for the laying of tracks upon which to run cars from the Brighton House to the corner of Fourth and Main Streets. This was just at the time when the first substantial and permanent paving had been put down on Freeman Avenue and Western Row. These streets had been torn up for so long that the proposition to lay these tracks caused public consternation and for a long time there was a general agitation. The people were undecided as to their choice between good streets and street car accommodations.

Protests, however, were of no avail and in the latter part of 1859 the "Red" or old John Street Line was put in operation. The cars were run at regular intervals from Brighton to the city. The opening

Every Description

To Our Friends and Patrons:

ALONG with the many other good things of the present-day Brighton, we have one of the most thoroughly up-to-date, perfectly equipped printing and folding-box establishments in the country. Our plant is supplied with the most modern machinery and material known to the art, including fast presses, etc., and is fully capable of supplying the every need and demand of the commercial and mercantile world. We fearlessly guarantee our work in all classes, from the simplest job of plain printing to the most elaborate and artistic color and multi-color production, to be superior and more satisfactory than that turned out by any other printing establishment in Cincinnati. The manufacture of folding-boxes in all sizes, shapes and designs, is our specialty, in which we employ only the very highest workmanship. Every part of this work is done in our factory, the finished box, ready for use, being produced from the raw material, thus saving the extra expense incident to piece-meal work.

An inspection of work that has been turned out by our factory is invited, and you are asked to call and secure estimates. A conference with us will save you money.

Very respectfully,

The Richardson-Hauser Printing Co.

of this line marked a memorable epoch in the history of Brighton. The start of the first car was witnessed by the entire populace and it was greeted with excitement and enthusiasm along the entire route. Public interest and curiosity continued for several weeks.

In 1860 the same company completed and began operating the old "Blue" or Seventh, Ninth, Freeman and Linn Street Line, which for fifteen years had its northern terminus at the corner of Freeman and York Streets, subsequently at the head of Freeman Avenue. After that and until electricity became the motive power for the operation of cars the "Blue" Line was operated to the Brighton House. In 1862 the City Passenger Railroad Company opened another line running from the Brighton House to Spring Grove Cemetery. Until 1876 the company's stables and car sheds were located on Freeman Avenue and Bank Street, when they were removed to the present site of the Brighton Electric Power Plant on Harrison Avenue and Patterson Street, occupying the exact location of the old stock yards.

The inauguration of the horse car system forced James Dougherty, who for many years had operated an omnibus line between Brighton and the Post Office, out of the business, the more convenient and comfortable method of travel being utilized by the public.

One of the interesting historic landmarks of Brighton is the building at the southwest corner of Central Avenue and Baymiller Street, occupied by the Louis W. Sauer drug store. It was erected by Mathias Felix in 1846 and occupied by him as a tavern until 1858, when it was sold to Michael Hoffmann, Sr., a porkpacker, who built the slaughter house in the rear, continuing in business there until 1874, when he retired, the firm being Hoffmann & Vester from 1868, Peter Vester, his brother-in-law, continuing the business until 1880. The building was then occupied a short time by butchers Theodore Hagenbuch and Jacob Benninger, the latter being succeeded in 1881 by John Hoffmann, the present occupant. The west half of the Central Avenue building was occupied as a cigar store from 1859 to 1869 by Philipp Hoffmann, brother of Michael Hoffmann, Sr., who is now located at 2011 Central Avenue. The east half, or corner room, was occupied by a druggist named Von Raschkauw.

At the death of Druggist Von Raschkauw the business passed to Dr. S. Alexander, a peculiar and well-known Brighton character in his day. His bachelor quarters were in the rear of the store and he was a boarder at the Brighton House. Dr. Alexander had many eccentricities and he is now remembered wending his way to the Brighton House sometimes in his stocking feet to satisfy the inner man, and returning almost invariably munching a good-sized piece of cheese. By one neighbor he has been referred to as a smart and great man and from all that has been and is said of him one is impressed with the belief that he must have been the local "Alexander the Great." While engaged in business here he also conducted a sanitarium in Lick Run. Dr. Alexander died in 1863, having been in business continuously at the same place from 1859. By order of the Court the business was sold to August Hottendorf, who had been a clerk in the employ of Dr. Alexander, and who was succeeded at his death in 1879 by Mund & Schmuck. In June, 1882, Louis W. Sauer came into possession of the business, which he conducted successfully until his death a few months ago, and which is now being managed by representatives of his estate. Thus the building—one of the oldest—has been occupied as a drug store about half a century.

An added distinction for the building is that it was for many years the landing place of more German emigrants than any other either in Brighton or Cincinnati. The cigar store of Philipp Hoffmann was the gathering place of many of those who hailed from the same vicinity in the old country and during leisure time they were there in various numbers reviewing their recollections of the Fatherland and discussing interesting and important questions of the new home, all of which created in them a feeling of kindred tie and home. This historic corner was also the boyhood home of the noted gymnasts Edmund and Frank Brendamour, whose mother occupied the west half of the present drug store from 1870 to 1874 as a millinery store.

As an illustration of property values during the first half and middle of the past century it is recounted that Michael Hoffmann rented from Mr. Kirby, after purchasing the frame buildings, consisting of a dwelling house, slaughter house and stables, which were on leased ground, a piece of property between Browne Street and the canal for $10 for the first year and $30 per year for the remaining six years of his occupancy.

Adam Metz and John Fieber were equally prominent pork-packers with Michael Hoffmann Sr. Competitors and in the same locality these three men were at the same time daily and almost hourly companions. Most of their purchases of hogs were made as if for one concern, divided proportionately, each paying for that portion that went to his business—a sort of primitive and miniature trust. In this way the names became associated and succeeding generations have been unable to disassociate Hoffmann, Metz and Fieber, a combination that was as well and favorably known throughout the whole city as it was in Brighton. The Metz establishment was located on the site of the present H. H. Meyer Packing Company. Mr. Fieber, after removing from Mohawk was in the building now occupied by the Hauser, Brenner & Fath Cooperage Company.

East of the old Fieber establishment, where is now Suhre's Anchor Tannery, were the Kirchner, Dewald and Thill tanneries. Near here old Squire Crary was also located for a number of years, a feature of whose administration was that he frequently held court in open air under a tree in the neighborhood. The row of buildings now numbered 1930, 32, 34 and 36, forming a point at Mohawk Bridge was erected later. Dr. M. L. Amick, whose office is at the extreme eastern point of this building has been in the locality a number of years and is prominent and influential. The wagon shop and residence of Fred Chris. Wuest, was located across Mohawk Bridge in the building now occupied by Jacob Mandery's milk depot. It is perpetuated to memory in a painting of Mohawk Bridge and its surroundings by Farney. His sons F. & C. Wuest, after his death, continued the business for a number of years in the old Bull Head Tavern building, which still stands as one of the oldest land marks of Mohawk.

Mohawk Bridge brings us to a dividing line between Brighton and Mohawk. What may be considered a practical estimate of the boundary of Brighton is the Brighton Hills, now Fairview Heights, and Camp Washington on the north, Mohawk Bridge and the Miami Canal to York Street on the east, Millcreek on the west and York Street on the South. The extensive soap and candle factories of Proctor & Gamble were for a number of years located within the Brighton district.

This plant covered all the ground between Central Avenue and the canal from a point about opposite Dayton Street to Charlotte Street, besides considerable property on the opposite side of Central Avenue and into York Street. The company began here in an humble way, sending out a horse and cart to gather wood-ashes and scraps of grease and bones, payment for which was made with one or several pieces of brown soap. During and previous to the forties much of this neighborhood consisted of vegetable gardens and orchards. One on Central Avenue between Dayton and Bank Streets belonged to John Watson and another where the York Street M. E. Church now stands was owned by William Watson. John Eckles, George Watson, Thomas Coope and others owned similar places in the vicinity. The cemetery of the German Protestant St. Peters congregation, whose church is now at Main Street and McMicken Avenue, was located west of Central Avenue between York and Dayton Streets, the ground now being covered by part of the plant of the John Hauck Brewing Company.

The firm of Hauck & Windisch was established by John Hauck and John Ulrich Windisch in 1863, and after the death of the latter the business was continued by John Hauck and later by the John Hauck Brewing Company. Henry Wentzel early in the fifties had a blacksmith shop at the corner of Central Avenue and Bank Street. Here also John Griesbaum had a wagon shop, being the one now operated by Bernhard Binder. James R. Palmer's and Frank Weil's omnibus and wagon shops were for many years on Bank Street near the Thirteens Engine House. The coffee house and hall of Valentine Kaheins, an ancient land mark, occupied the present site of the Reimann building during the fifties, and many of the pioneers recall the days of youth when they danced in this hall. In the middle of the sidewalk in front of this house was a box-covered pump from which water was drawn with the time-honored "old oaken bucket." Pursuant to a city ordinance this well was afterwards filled. Reimann & Co., the photographers, who in 1874 located at No. 1936 Central Avenue, erected and moved to the present building in 1892.

The Eger drug store, at Mohawk Bridge, was one of the earliest established in this locality, being owned successively by Druggists Kuehn, Nolte, Zahn and Otto C. F. Lippert, the latter being in business there from 1861 to 1864, when he sold to August Stumpe, who in turn was succeeded by George Eger, who died in 1900, the business being continued by his family. Otto C. F. Lippert, after being associated for several years with G. W. Maas in the furniture business, was the owner of the Brighton drug store from 1869 to 1879, J. H. Koenig, being the present owner.

Dr. James Richardson who was a prominent physician in Brighton about the middle of the past century, was a large real estate holder in the district. He owned the Mohawk drug store and a number of the buildings to the east and west of it, including the Brighton Odd Fellows' Hall, one of the present old landmarks, being the building now known as 1941 Central Avenue. In this old hall the butchers' and other associations and the Brighton Volunteer Fire Company held their meetings and Mohawk Lodge I. O. O. F. was founded in this building in 1850. At the entrance can still be seen, partly obliterated by the ravages of time, the sign of Dr. Richardson.

"Schwabenland" was a historic gathering place. Andreas Dieterle was its founder and owner from 1858 until 1891, when he died, being succeeded by Charles Hess, who continued it several years. Mr. Dieterle was a man of quiet disposition and strict business principles and his place was at all times conspicuously orderly. The excellent house keeping qualities of Mrs. Dieterle added to the charm and the fame of the place and their combined careful management brought them only the very best class of patronage. The interior walls were handsomely decorated in oil with landscape scenery, after the style of the German "Wirths-stube." Among the "Stamm-gaeste" were Michael Eckert, Postmaster and County Treasurer F. J. Mayer, Judge Lindemann, Michael Hoffmann, sr., Adam Metz, John Fieber, Andreas Brehm and many other notables.

Michael Eckert one of the successful pioneer business men of Brighton, was a practical tanner, who with Gerhard Dickmann, in 1841 founded what afterward grew to be the extensive Western Tannery on Central Avenue near Clarkson Street. Mr. Dickmann withdrew from the firm in 1858, Mr. Eckert continuing the tannery, which he enlarged from time to time until it occupied the spacious buildings now constituting the iron foundry plant of J. B. Blettner & Co., and the grounds and buildings now occupied by the Meyer Bros. Furniture Company on Wilmink Street. The tannery business was discontinued upon the death of Mr. Eckert in 1877, but the firm of Griess, Pfleger & Co., composed of former employes of Mr. Eckert, became his successor in the sales department on Main Street opposite the Custom House, where they continued until their removal to their present location on Sycamore Street.

The southeast corner of Central Avenue and Linn Street is remembered by pioneers as a woolen weaving establishment, owned by G. Arand, the building in later years being occupied by Conrad Silbernagel and August Draude. The building adjoining on the east was the Adam Metz residence and after his removal to the corner of Bank and Linn Streets, was for a number of years occupied by the shoemaker George P. Schaurer and is now occupied by K. Schuh's dry goods store. At the southwest corner of Central Avenue and Linn Street was an old-fashioned two-story brick building owned by Adam Metz, which at various times was occupied by Abraham Deck, Fred Korzenborn, William Huttenmueller and Frank Duttonhoefer. The Gall family was one of the early occupants of the next house, which was afterwards the home of Frank Metz, adjoining which was the barbershop and saloon of Philipp Bickenhaeuser, who was one of the first in this part of the city to establish a bowling alley.

In this immediate neighborhood, about half a century ago, Jacob Vogel, senior member of the present pork packing firm, began business in a primitive way, like some of his contemporaries, taking the meat of the hogs he killed to market in a wheel barrow. Anthony Pancera was one of the successful butchers along here and his next door neighbor on the west was Peter Kleeman the cabinet maker, father of William and Nicholas Kleeman. John Oelgoetz and Leonhard Freund occupied the adjoining buildings.

Peter Felix, a tailor, of one of the early Brighton families, erected the building now occupied by his sons, Michael and Charles Felix, at the northwest corner of Central Avenue and Baymiller Street, in the early seventies, and located there. Michael Felix, a brother of the tailor, Peter King, Jacob Haehl and Carl Jung were the renowned wagon makers in this neighborhood between the forties and seventies, the former's shop being on Western Row opposite Larabee Bridge Road, where Casper Gehred afterward conducted a butcher business, while in the adjoining building, now 2007, he had a saloon, which in one of the early directories is referred to as "The Country Hall." Peter King's shop was on the north side of Western Row, west of Baymiller. A special feature of his business was the manufacture and repair of gypsy wagons.

Fathers and mothers of today can vividly recall to memory when, as children, they watched with mingled admiration and fear, these traveling houses and their occupants in front of the old wagon shop, which still stands and is now occupied by the wagon maker George Wollenschlager. Another scene readily recalled is that of King, at work in the then vacant lot at the northwest corner of Central Avenue and Baymiller Street, where, over a huge fire, the tires were heated and applied to the wheels. The interesting part of the recollection to those who were then boys is one that could be justly described only by a James Whitcomb Riley. After the departure of the wagon maker and his assistants, "us boys" would take the field, each provided with a potato—just a plain every-day potato—which would be sacrificed over the slumbering embers and ashes, and then followed a feast the memory of which rejuvenates the palate.

The tannery of J. F. Forbus & Co. was at the northeast corner of Central Avenue and Larabee Bridge Road, to the business of which William C. Kennett succeeded, erecting the buildings now occupied by the Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Company. Dr. S. Greenwald's office was in the Enyart house on the opposite corner, which in later years was occupied by William Poseiner's meat store, being also the home of Jonas Fishburn, Maurice Foucar, who was connected with the Forbus tannery, and George Caldwell, cashier at the Brighton street car office. Charles Gutermuth, the barber, occupied the next Enyart building. The furniture stores of G. W. Maas occupied the several buildings to the west, Otto Lippert, Emil Wagner and Martin Oosterkamp being associated with him at various times, the latter succeeding to the stand upon Mr. Maas removal to Cumminsville. In later years, and up to the time of his death, Emil Wagner was in business in the old Odd Fellows' Hall. John Rehm was one of the early cabinet makers here. George Baum, a pine and cedar cooper, located in this section late in the forties. This was an important business at that time, the cedar ware being much used by butchers and as family utensils. Jacob Pfau, Fred Loesch and John Kobmann were the representative men in the tinner's trade, the former's shop adjoining George Baum's place. Fred Loesh, who is still in business, located on Central Avenue in 1855. For a number of years John Kobmann was in the Taylor building, from where he removed to Mohawk Bridge, the business now being conducted by his son, Charles Kobmann.

On the south side of Central Avenue east of Baymiller, where John Kahley erected the several buildings now occupying the site, was located a butcher, Charles Huck, and here was another treadmill propelled by a dog to furnish power for a meat chopping machine. Fred Engelke and Fred Gollinger established bakeries on Central Avenue during the sixties, the former near Mohawk Bridge, which is still conducted by descendants of the family, and the latter at the corner of Baymiller Street. William A. Allen was one of the pioneer merchants in the furnishing and general outfitting business at the northeast corner of Central Avenue and Baymiller Street.

The cottage at the corner of Baymiller Street and the canal is one of the old landmarks, having stood here about three score years. It was alternately the home of Dr. Barnwell, Benjamin Campbell, George Kuhn and Henry Hardt. The head of this street was one of the landing places for the canal boats. During the summers pic-nic parties on their primitive crafts bound for Ludlow Grove could be seen daily. A vast amount of freight was unloaded here, especially cord wood, which was pretty generally used as fuel by the butchers, bakers and private families. Ice was harvested here in great abundance during the winters. At this point the residence of Samuel J. Browne, west of Baymiller, and that of his son, Pierson, further east, were the only houses on the hillside during and previous to the sixties, being surrounded by orchards and pastures.

The wholesale grocery firm of Joseph Taylor & Co. is one of the oldest business concerns in Brighton, having been established at the present location by John Taylor in 1844. In 1851 his brother, Joseph, became associated with him, the firm then being John Taylor & Co. The elder member of the firm retired and removed to Kansas in 1876, Joseph continuing the business alone until recent years when his sons, Walter and Arthur, associated themselves and assumed part management with their father.

In 1844 and 1845 Hiram Clearwater erected the buildings now occupied by the hardware store and wholesale grocery, and in 1851 he sold the property to John Taylor, who built the block adjoining on the east in 1855. Froelking & Marmet, hardware merchants, predecessors to the present occupant, were in business in the first named of these buildings from 1856 to 1868. August Froelking and Otto Marmet, of this firm were also partners in the firm of Marmet & Co., one of whose coal yards at that time was opposite their store. Adjoining the coal yard on the east was C. Beckmann, a merchant tailor, the building later being occupied as a candy factory by George G. Smith, the popular Major of the famous First Regiment Band.

It was in Brighton that the band from which the First Regiment came into existence was organized. Major Smith was a member of the old Jackson Combination Club in Brighton, in conjunction with which he organized a small brass band. "Smitty" and his music at once became popular and in a few years his band was consolidated with the Y. M. C. A. band, of which Mr. Al. Macbair was the leader. Some of the most enthusiastic and hard working members of the present First Regiment Band are Major Smith and a few of his associates in the Jackson Combination Club. Major Smith's son, George, is the musical director of the First Regiment Band.

The tavern of John Deprez adjoined the Marmet yard on the west, and the ice houses of Robert R. Reynolds, afterward the Stone Lake Ice Company, were in this immediate vicinity. John Deremo, the veteran shoemaker, located on Western Row next to the Taylor grocery in 1852. Much of his business was with the stock raisers who came to the Brighton House, and as factory-made boots and shoes were practically unknown it was his daily routine to visit the guests at this hostelry and take their orders for custom made boots. He died in 1861, his widow continuing the business until her death in 1888, since which time it has been conducted by their son, John Deremo, of the John Shillito Company. Martin Sauer, in the Taylor Block; E. Westerkamm, Central Avenue near Freeman; John Hummel, Freeman Avenue and Bank Street; John Kafer and H. H. Berling, Central Avenue near the Mohawk Bridge; Nicholas Hof and Henry Decker, on Harrison Avenue, were also among the early shoemakers.

Joseph Ritzer, the pioneer saddle and harness maker, established his business on Central Avenue near Freeman in 1855, near where he is still in business. Paul Schopper, in the same line, located near Mohawk Bridge, where he was succeeded by Fred W. Herrmann, and later, his nephew, Gottlieb Schopper, continued the business near the Brighton House after the retirement of the elder Schopper.

The Weyand & Jung Brewery was established on Western Row in 1857 and in 1871 the plant was enlarged by the erection of new buildings on Freeman Avenue and Bank Street. The former is now the Germania Brewery and the latter the Jung Brewery. J. Geo. Oeh, now with the Moerlein Brewing Company, was bookkeeper for the Weyand & Jung Company for a number of years.

In these days one of the leading industries in Brighton was that of bristle combing, the material for which was obtained from the slaughtering establishments. Henry and Jacob Winkler engaged in the hair and bristle manufacturing business on Stark Street in 1855, the former removing to Central Avenue near Freeman in 1860, where he continued in business for himself until 1888, and for a number of years, after removing from the original location, Jacob was in business adjoining the Eckert Tannery. The firm of Kindel & Pistner, the latter, father of E. C. Pistner and until his death a few years ago, a Lieutenant of Police, was engaged for many years in the same industry on Clearwater Street near Baymiller. Anthony Schaefer, William Russell and Henry Cordes were the horse shoers, the established business of the former still being conducted by his son, Bernard Schaefer.

Robert Reynolds, Sr., Joseph, John and George Reynolds, were poultry dealers, and William, another brother, was a grocer. All of these were cousins of R. R. Reynolds, Sr., the pioneer ice merchant, and father of Robert R. Reynolds, President of the Ice Delivery Company. Charles F. Muth, the honey king, purchased the grocery on Western Row opposite Freeman in 1862, occupying the building erected by Thomas Taylor in 1838. To the business Mr. Muth added the specialty of honey and bee keepers' supplies, in which he became an acknowledged authority. Another well-known pioneer family was that of Henry Kresz, owner of the Brighton Hotel. For a number of years he occupied a row of frame buildings on Western Row opposite Freeman, where he conducted a boarding house and saloon. Many of the dairymen, gardeners and butchers took their breakfasts here daily while on their early morning trips to serve their customers. With the growth of the business Mr. Kresz erected the present buildings. After his death his widow and son continued the business until the death of the latter, when Charles Abaecherli succeeded to it. George Taubald, a brother-in-law of Henry Kresz, was a prominent grain and feed merchant, occupying the property adjoining the Kresz place.

William Bromley, an Englishman, in 1843 started a pottery in the building erected by Thomas Rutherford for a bristle factory at the south-west corner of Freeman and Central Avenues. Duncan & Bunten, carpenters and builders, erected many houses in Brighton and not a few big down-town structures, among them the Hulbert Block, at Sixth and Vine Streets. They built and owned a substantial block on the west side of Freeman Avenue south of Central. Their shop at Freeman and Clearwater, was later the wagon factory of Philip Schoneberger, who was in the business there many years. At the corner of Hamilton Road and Denman Street, now Central and Kindel Avenues, was the brewery of Peter Herancourt, a brother of George M. Herancourt. It was known as the "Box Brewery," the building being constructed entirely of frame.

Jacob Thiel's feed mill was in this immediate locality. One of the pioneer merchants here is Joseph H. Wolf, who, since 1862, has conducted the grocery on Central Avenue west of Freeman, and the feed and grain business at Central and Kindel Avenues. Retiring from the former business several years ago, his son-in-law, the late J. B. Lagemann, became his successor, and since his death the business has been continued by his widow, who also has a dry goods business in the Lagemann Block, adjoining the Brighton German Bank. Mr. Wolf still carries on the feed and grain business, in which his son, Joseph B. Wolf, is associated with him.

C. H. W. Weber is another of the old-time merchants here, who early in his business career was a clerk for C. F. Muth. He removed recently from the corner of Central and Kindel Avenues to his present location. Ernst Freund, one of the early butchers, was for many years on Central Avenue opposite Denman Street, and the shoe store of I. Schiff, father of Leon Schiff, the novelty merchant on Central avenue, was near here. Jacob and Louis Zachritz and Charles Fehr were pioneer barbers near the Brighton House and Charles Fehr, Jr., who succeeded to his father's business, may in turn be classed as a pioneer. Sergeant Detective Cal Crim was a Brightonian, having worked in the Fehr establishment several years, and later owned a shop on Western Avenue.

Adolph and Fred Huss, engaged in the grocery business opposite the Brighton House early in the fifties, which he continued until 1875. Mr. Huss erected the building now occupied by the Brighton office of the Traction Company on the site of the old grocery.

Adjoining this on the east was Buckley's blacksmith shop while on the west was located Jacob Bauer, a charcoal dealer, the building being occupied later by Louis Zachritz. Next to this was a Mrs. Schweitzer whose place was a veritable curiosity shop. All the boys and girls of Brighton in those days knew "Mrs. Muggel," as she was called and they came from far and near with their pennies to buy her celebrated molasses candy.

At the western terminus of Central Avenue, now the approach to the Brighton Bridge, was the saloon and summer garden of Michael Haag, and it was here that he constructed a sort of draw bridge of crude rafts, over which passage was given for five cents per person to the woods on the opposite side, where were ideal outing and picnic grounds. He also built the circular building known as the "Round House," still standing, opposite the bridge, converting the grounds into a garden. Franz de Correvont was the veteran photographer where is now the studio of Louis Schaetzle. John Collet, a cigar manufacturer, was for many years on the opposite side of Central Avenue. Some of the members of this pioneer family, among them Mrs. Andrew Messmer, still live in the Brighton district. Others of the early cigar manufacturers not heretofore mentioned were John and William Minning, George Schucht and Henry Lorenz. The Helmsderfer and Pandorf families are among those whose homes have been near the site of the old Brighton House continuously for more than half a century.

Fred Helmsderfer's bakery was at the south-east corner of Hamilton Road and Coleman Street and his next door neighbor was Charles Pandorf, dealer in dry goods and notions. David Hottman's "Old Hickory" saloon, or coffee house, and the original Brighton street railway office were in this block. During the civil war a recruiting station was established in the "Old Hickory" building with Col. Gustav Tafel, former Mayor, in charge. Thomas Streiff, father of Detective Phil. Streiff, was in the confectionery business near here early in the sixties. Mrs. Schroth, mother of John and Fred, of the Schroth Packing Company, had a meat store in the frame building where now stands the Brighton German Bank, where were also coffee houses conducted by Michael Schantz, Jacob Schaible and Joseph Cramer. Fritsch & Zeidler, porkpackers, were where John Hoffmann's Sons are now located. The present Brighton play grounds on Winchell Avenue was the vegetable garden of Adam Hust about half a century ago and was later conducted by Andreas Salm.

CURES BALDNESS

Trial Package Free to Convince People It Actually Grows Hair.

MISS. EMMA EMOND.

The portraits of Miss Emma Emond show what a striking difference is made in a person when the bald head is covered with hair. Miss Emond was totally bald, the hair follicles not only upon her head but upon her eyebrows being completely contracted, not the sign of a hair being found. Of course she was the object of many experiments all of which failed and the offer of a well known Dispensary to send a free trial of their remedy was peculiarly alluring to her. She sent for the free trial, followed all directions faithfully and soon she was rewarded by a growth of hair, which for thickness, quality and luxuriance was as remarkable as the result was gratifying. Miss Emond lives in St Sauveur, Quebec, Canada at 110 Signai Street, and naturally feels very much elated to recover from total baldness.

Those who are losing their hair or have parted with their locks can have it restored by a remedy that is sent free to all. A Cincinnati firm has concluded that the best way to convince people that hair can be grown on any head is to let them try it, and see for themselves. All sorts of theories have been advanced to account for falling hair but after all, it is the remedy we are after and not the theory. People who need more hair, or are anxious to save what they have or from sickness, dandruff or other causes have lost their hair should at once send for a free trial package and learn for themselves that their hair can be quickly restored.

The remedy also cures itching and dandruff, sure signs of approaching baldness, and keeps the scalp healthy and vigorous. It also restores gray hair to natural color and produces thick and lustrous eyebrows and eyelashes. By sending your name and address to the Altenheim Medical Dispensary, 709 Butterfield Building, Cincinnati, Ohio, enclosing a 2 cent stamp to cover postage, they will mail you prepaid a free trial of their remarkable remedy together with testimonials from thousands who have used the remedy and all information necessary to help you in quickly regaining your hair.

Bernhard Willinger, an Alsatian, started a saloon at the southwest corner of Harrison Avenue and Riddle Street in 1857, over the door of which he had painted the sign "Frenchman's Corner," from which the locality became so designated. In 1868 Willinger erected the building at the corner of Spring Grove and Harrison Avenues, removing both the business and the sign to this corner. Since his death the name has been changed to "Fort Thomas," the business now being conducted by M. W. Thomas, but the neighborhood is still known as Frenchman's Corner. From this point to Millcreek was known as Goose Town, the name being derived from the large number of geese allowed to run at large. For several years there was a brewery on Harrison Avenue near Riddle Street, owned at various times by Michael Beck, Beck & Bauer and Beck & Bogen.

The Benckenstein family was one of the earliest in this locality. John Christian Benckenstein, a gardner and florist, owned a large tract of land between Harrison and Queen City Avenues, Brighton Street and the Bogen property, where he located in 1830. In 1864 he gave the right of way through his property for Spring Grove Avenue. About this time he erected a building intended for a brewery, which, however, he converted into a concert and dance hall, in connection with which he had a restaurant and summer garden, where is now located the mammoth plant of the P. R. Mitchell Company. The brewery of Hochenleitner & Renner was at the south-west corner of Harrison Avenue and Division Street, now McLean Avenue until about 1870, part of the building being occupied by John Taubald's saloon, who was later at the corner of Harrison Avenue and Brighton Street. During the forties and fifties there was a Jewish cemetery adjoining the brewery property on Division Street.

The building which has for many years been the homestead of William Buck, father-in-law of Deputy Sheriff Jacob Cormany, was originally the home of James See. Mr. Buck located here in 1855 and was for some years in the hog bladder trade and later in the meat business, in both of which he was successful, becoming an extensive real estate owner. He erected the buildings occupied by Dr. A. J. Hofling's drug store and Joseph Dumont's grocery. Goetz's Park, a garden after the fashion of Benckenstein's, was at the north-west corner of Harrison Avenue and Brighton Street, now Buck Street, where later was the residence of Ferd. Zimmermann, a wine merchant, brother-in-law of Judge, John B. Stall. Adjoining this property are now located the extensive plants of J. Dornette & Bro., office furniture manufacturers, and the Railway Supply and Manufacturing Company, successors to Joseph Joseph & Bros. Another of the early taverns, now a landmark, was the Port Cincinnati House, later the Western Avenue House, at the south-east corner of Harrison and Western Avenues which was owned at various times by Philip Schoelenberg, Gottlieb Schoettker and Charles Holle. On the north side of Harrison opposite Western Avenue was the distillery of Fred. Arleth.

Along with the vegetable gardens there were a number of brick-yards and dairies in the mill creek bottoms north and south of here. Fred. Hoffmann, brother of Philipp and Michael, Sr., established an extensive dairy on Spring Grove Avenue north of Thomas Street, now Queen City Avenue, in 1861, combining with it the business of trading in malt feed. The malt, after passing through the brewing process, was bought on contract and sold to dairymen. John Heck, on Ailanthus Street, and Peter Schaurer, previous to establishing what is now F. J. Meder's saloon and M. Krumm's boarding house, were in the same business. Henry Schmitt, Casper Fenzel, Gottlieb Beigel, Michael Fries, Dosch & Torner and Charles F. Schwenkmeyer, father of Dr. G. F. and William H. Schwenkmeyer, the latter of the Queen City Coffee and Spice Mills, and Mrs. Andrew Jergens, were the representative coopers.

Ferdinand Diekmann, inventor and manufacturer, and John H. Noll are among the pioneer business men and other of the early families were those of Jacob Mandery, dairyman and saloonist, grandfather of Jacob Mandery; Henry Janson, gardner; Jacob Pfeffer, distiller; William Traxel, cooper; Marx Daiker, brickmason; Fred. Ganzemiller, stone cutter; John Wuest, M. B. Eichner and Adam Renner, saloonists, and Chris. Gabbenesch, Geo. Spiesz, Henry Hasebrock, B. Ruberg, Schone & Hoernschemeyer and Geo. Abel, tailors.

Perhaps the oldest running business in Brighton to-day is the brewery established under the name of the Philadelphia Brewery by George M. Herancourt in 1848 at Ernst Station, now Brighton Station, which is the present establishment of the Herancourt Brewing Company. The hills on the north and west of Brighton offered excellent stone quarrying opportunities and among those who were engaged in this business were John Zinck and Rudolph Lutterbey, of Lutterbey & Muehlhaeuser, maltsters, and more recently President of the Herancourt Brewing Company. John Deck was an early cellar excavator, and J. B. H. Nolte and H. William Kopp were sewer tappers. Dietrich Reinhart was one of the early grocers at Harrison Avenue and Brighton Street and Chris. Gobrecht at the corner of Turner Street. Norbert Graf, manufactured hand-made horse shoe nails, a business now extinct, on Western Row near Freeman, employing five or six men.

The families of David Hummel, founder of the David Hummel Building Company, and W. P. Hulbert were early ones on Freeman Avenue. William L. Gaddum, many years a prominent insurance man,

The Geo. A. Thayer Carpet Cleaning and Rug Manufacturing Co. is one of the oldest concerns in this line in the west and is one of the few that actually clean carpets by compressed air, which does not injure the finest fabrics, but does thoroughly clean all materials of dirt and dust.

In the Rug Manufacturing branch, their reputation for fine work is national and their products are to be seen in homes of every state in the Union.

These rugs are made from carpet scrap and also from old carpet, and make a soft, warm, durable and pretty rug, a visit to the factory or a communication to the firm will receive prompt attention.

father of A. L. Gaddum, of the A. Sander Packing Company, and A. W. Gaddum Vice-President of the Cincinnati Butchers' Supply Company, was a pioneer York Street resident. Among the prominent families of Dayton Street are those of General A. Hickenlooper, E. A. Ferguson, William Goodall, Dr. M. L. Amick, Louis J. Hauck, H. J. A. Severet, J. G. Hartke, father of George Hartke, the hardware merchant, and Ferdinand Karrmann, retired veteran bookbinder and present treasurer of the German Mutual Fire Insurance Company. Mr. Karrmann when about ten years of age was the carrier of the Weltbuerger, the first German newspaper, (weekly) published in Cincinnati. On the whole of his route extending from the city water-works to Benckenstein's garden, which he covered on foot, he had about ten subscribers.

Among former residents of Dayton Street were Mayor George B. Hatch, Governor J. D. Cox, Governor R. M. Bishop, Adolphus H. Smith, George W. Skaats, S. L. Snodgrass, Jacob Wirth, John Hauck, Joseph Goettle, James H. Laws, Judge George Lindemann, F. J. Mayer, postmaster under President Lincoln and later county treasurer; John and Joseph Taylor, Ralph McCracken, Louis Balluf, Ferd. Brown, and Rev. Edward Harwood, who was the original of the character of "Senator Bird" in Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin, the incident in which Senator Bird assists Eliza in her escape having really occurred. The Harwood residence at the southeast corner of Dayton and Baymiller Streets, which was later occupied by Judge Moses F. Wilson and which is now the home of John U. Windisch, Jr., secreted many fugitive slaves during the troublesome days.

Much of the landscape gardening hereabouts was done by Abraham Hoffmann a brother of Mrs. John Deremo, Sr. On Dayton Street opposite Whiteman there was for a number of years a pottery owned by Pollock & Bailey and Coultney & Maloney. The family of Herman Dierkes, father of J. H. and L. B. Dierkes, of the New York Life Insurance Company, was one of the pioneer ones here. Frank Buegler, a brickmason; Frank Benz, a carpenter, and Andrew Brehm and Jacob Dewald, stonemasons, resided in this immediate neighborhood, and the home of J. A. Gall was long on Linn Street south of Bank. Among the pioneer residents of Bank Street were William Taylor, P. Arendt, A. Hagemann, Nick Woll, Michael Peter, Anton Wagner, Wendel Joachim, William Runge, H. Sicking, Charles Blankenfield, Louis Benninger, Charles Weiss, Daniel Robinson, Ferdinand Zimmerer, Valentine Heyl, Dr. Louis P. Hottendorf, Mrs. John Lorenz, John J. ded since 1844, on Bank Street near Baymiller. John Dorst located adjoining the old Clearwater homestead, which still stands at the southwest corner of Bank and Baymiller, in 1833. The early bakers here were Jacob Moschel, B. Windoffer and Louis Diemer, Andrew Weis succeeding the latter. J. H. Huelsmann, Bernard Sicking, Philip Volz and George Helmig were the early grocers and John Hoffmann, Sr., Michael Schickling and Jacob Seibel the butchers. One of the pioneer families of this vicinity was that of J. H. Groene, the father of Theodore and J. C. Groene. The homes of Jacob Schneider, Michael Hoffmann and Pierce Gorman, father of Mrs. J. D. Smith, were on Ailanthus Street. John Blackburn, Joseph Schoenberger and Henry Madaka, all of whom attended school in the old frame building on Baymiller Street, are the oldest of Brighton's butchers still in business. Schoenberger and Madaka reside on Baymiller Street, where is also situated the home of John Rettig, the artist, whose wife is a daughter of Mrs. (Milligan) Madaka.

George C. Galbraith, remembered as "Scotch George," father of George W. Galbraith, of the Laidlaw-Dunn-Gordon Company, was active in public affairs and represented the Twenty-third ward in the old city council. The same neighborhood also furnished the late Frank Kirchner to public office.

Other Brighton butchers of prominence were Harrison and Perry Winton, Charles Leggett, Thomas, John and William Stewart, N. B. Isaac J. Miller, who is largely responsible for the transformation of the Brighton hill top into a picturesque resident suburb, has resided there since 1866. It was largely through his instrumentality that the Fairview incline was erected and the Fairview and the Cross Town electric routes were established. It was here that cannons were planted during the civil war to guard against an attack by Kirby, and here, too, occurred many encounters between the Brighton and the Mohawk boys in the conquest for superiority of "neighborhood tribes." These two factions, however, never failed to combine in one common cause when the "Texans" from the territory south of Liberty Street invaded their domain.

The first house on the Browne estate when subdivided after the death of Samuel J. Browne in 1872 was erected by Peter Huber three years later and now stands at No. 540 Conroy Street. Some of the early settlers here were William Endebrock, Sr., Charles Weitzel, Barney Schmidt, August Beckmann, John Deremo, F. J. Werner, Frederick Plogstedt, Jacob Fath, Anton Mueller, Edward Goodwin, and the Essel, Fox, Blankenbuehler, Klotter, Geiger, Freyer, Exterkamp, Lindemann, Gerst, Bruns, Guenther, Runck, Riemenschneider, Von der Ahe, Schulze, Kasper, Bock, Michel, Stadler Alexander and Dannenhold families.

Among the oldest employes of the Street Railway Company now in the employ of the Traction Company in the Brighton district are James Ray, who has served forty three years; Patrick Welsh, now serving out his thirty-seventh year; Isaac S. McCracken, who began as driver thirty-five years ago and is now receiver at the Brighton office; John McNair, a conductor for twenty-eight years; Jacob Kreidler, who has been a driver and motorman for twenty-seven years, and Philip Koenig or "King" as he is generally known, now Division Superintendent, who has been in the service thirty-two years. Daniel Collins was one of the first drivers on the old John Street horse car line. John Harris, the present Superintendent, had charge of the Brighton mule pens of W. H. Stephens & Co. from 1862 to 1867, since which time he has been in the street railway service.

John Graham, has been the driver of the engine at the Bank Street Engine House for twenty-seven years, and Walter S. Phares and John Vetter, both of whom have served most of the time there, have been with the city fire department about fifty years, the former being Captain of the company for a number of years. William Phares and Joseph G. Weil, members of the Department, were Brighton boys.

John Schatzmann, was the pioneer Brighton policeman. William B. Hanks, now doing patrol duty in the Brighton district, has been a member of the police department for twenty-one years, and John Wambsgans, Marcellus Abel and Louis Albrecht, members of the department, spent their school days in Brighton. Herman Schroeder has been a merchant policeman for eighteen years and Joseph Elbert for ten years.

Fred Pfiester was Superintendent of the Union Stockyards for a number of years from 1870 and Peter F. Vester, now weigher, began his service here as manager of the feed department in 1869. Adam Heck was employed in this department from 1863 to 1898, and R. F. and Charles Enyart were connected with the company for many years.

Charles C. Couden, became the first mail carrier in Brighton in 1870, previous to which it was a suburban route served by mounted carrier. Henry Smith has been Superintendent of Station B. Brighton, since August 7, 1901.

The Fourth Intermediate School on Baymiller Street was erected in 1851. For twenty years it was the Fourteenth District, being changed to the Fourth Intermediate in 1871. Prof. George F. Sands was the Principal from 1857 to 1901, when he was transferred to the Third Intermediate, being succeeded by Prof. Edward H. Pritchard. The present teachers are Messrs. Sawyer, Hahn, Lotter, Siecke, Schwartz and the Misses Cameron, Ambrose, Benninger, See, Pape, Meltzer, Crumley, Hopkins, Hasselbach, Meinhardt, Otte, Danks, Bettie and Alnette Wilson.

The Twenty-seventh District, known as the Riddle Street School, was built in 1871. John B. Scheidemantle, Lewis Freeman and C. C. Long have served as Principals here and Lafayette Bloom has been the Principal since 1886. A juvenile mandolin, guitar and violin orchestra of forty pieces, of which William Schaefer is instructor, and the Lafayette Bloom Military Band and Drum Corps are unique features of this school. The teachers are Messrs. Schaefer, Reszke, Parker and the Misses Siebel, Pugh, Wolf, Sullivan, Dressel, Hacking, Meyersieck, Friedeborn, Cohen, Radcliffe, Strack, Foerster, Allen, Palmer, Pistorius, Schmitthenner and Tuechter.

The building of the Twenty-eighth District School was erected in 1880 on Browne Street. Prof. W. H. Remley has been the Principal since 1894, Christopher Rapp and E. A. Renner having preceeded him. The present corps of teachers is comprised of the following named: F. J. Keller, Misses Deppe, Rennick, Baader, Halley, Oeh, Winkelmann, Newman, Sobolewski, Romes, Hess,

The York Street M. E. Church was dedicated in 1844 as Maley Chapel, receiving its present name four years later. Among its pastors have been Bishop J. M. Walden and Rev. Granville Moody. Rev. Edward McHugh is now serving his fourth year as its pastor. The Church of the Cross was built by an English speaking congregation during the forties, some years later becoming a German Reformed and in 1875 the St. Luke's Episcopal congregation came into possession of the property. Rev. Paul Matthews has been the Rector since 1896. St. Augustine's Catholic Church was erected in 1853, at which time services were conducted in English. It became a German church in 1857, since which time its pastors have been Revs. Thomas Boulger, Bernhard Hengehold, Bernhard Menge, Paul Leopold and Father A. H. Walburg, who recently celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his pastorate. The First German Presbyterian Church was founded in 1856 its pastors having been Revs. Winnes, Lichtenstein, Seibert, Hortsch and Richard Lange, the present incumbent. Blanchard Chapel, now Station F of the Ninth Street Baptist Church, was built during the sixties by the English Methodist Mission Society, and became a German Church in 1871. Its pastors have been Revs. Golder, Traessle, Roser and Schimmelfenn and Herzer. A congregation organized in 1845 erected the First German Reformed Church in 1888 and removed from Elm and Fifteenth Streets. Its pastors have been Revs. Kroh, Gerhart, Rust, Lichtenstein, Kuelling, Bachmann and Hagelskamp.

The Brighton of today is a revelation. The transformation has been marvelous. A few years has wrought wonderful changes. It is now the undisputed industrial bee-hive of the Great Queen City of the West. It is an important adjunct to the gigantic manufacturing and commercial community comprising one of the foremost and important cities in the United States, and it is contributing its full share to the vast aggregate of prosperity, advancement, progress and enterprise. Where only a few years ago there were vacant lots, garden patches and miniature enterprises there are now mammoth manufacturing concerns giving employment to thousands of workmen and distributing the products of their labor to all parts of the world. In many branches of industrial life Brighton ranks in the front. She boasts of the largest toilet soap plant in the world and likewise a feather and down industry that is second to none. On every hand and at every turn one sees energy, shrift, push and vim. The present of Brighton is gloriously prosperous and the future if propitious. Brighton has advantages that are inviting and unsurpassed. Thus growth continues year after year. Not the least is the superior shipping facilities afforded.

To enumerate the industrial enterprises of Brighton would be an endless task. They are of every character and kind, conspicuous among them being the following. The Andrew Jergens Company, manufacturer of toilet soaps and perfumes; the P. R. Mitchell Company, feathers and down, William Dock & Co., soaps; the Schacht Manufacturing Company, carriages and vehicles; the William Powell Company, brass founders; J. Dornette & Bro., desks and office furniture; J. B. Blettner & Co., machinists; the J. H. Day Company, manufacturer of all kinds of machinery; L. J. Miller, elevators and machinery; Meyer Bros. Furniture Company, the F. Miller Vinegar and Pickle Company, the Brighton Flour Mill, the McLean Avenue Machine Shops and many others.

Rudolph Suhre, founder of the Anchor Tannery, came to this country in 1864 at the age of 21 and settled at once in Camp Washington, where he was employed as a laborer in various tanneries until he worked himself up to the superintendency of the Ballauf tannery on Straight Street. This position he occupied until 1883, when he started his own business on a very modest scale. This business has steadily grown until the plant now covers a space of 122 by 170 feet, the building being a modern three-story structure. Mr. Suhre died in 1901, since which time the business has been successfully managed by his two sons.

Long before the establishment of the Brighton German Bank the urgent need and necessity of such a home institution was felt by the growing business interests of this community. For fifteen years John Hauck, the late brewer, fostered the idea of establishing such a concern here and at frequent intervals sought to interest others in the project, but it remained for Mr. Max Mosler to conceive and design the proper mode of procedure and it was not until the latter part of 1898 that his efforts resulted in the successful culmination. On the afternoon of November 4, that year, a meeting of about fifty representatives of Brighton, Camp Washington and Fairmount business interests was held in Brighton Hall, at which $60,000 of the $100,000 proposed capital stock was subscribed in less than an hour. This was the beginning of the success of the enterprise, and in less than two months the organization was completed under the direction of an executive committee composed of Max Mosler, Andrew Jergens, Frank Haffner, George Klotter, Robert H. West, James D. Smith, Rudolph Suhre, Ferdinand Dieckmann and Theodore Groene.

January 3, 1899 was a day of much rejoicing in Brighton. The hope of years had, as if by magic, become a reality—the long and anxious wish of the great and small interests, individual and collective, was fulfilled. It was at 9 o'clock on the morning of this day that the Brighton German Bank was actually called into life. It then began an existence that has already been far more successful, profitable and beneficial than the most sanguine among those interested in its creation had hoped for. It is today one of the recognized substantial financial institutions in the great group of which Cincinnati proudly boasts, and is officered and managed by the strongest business and financial men of the community. Its officers, stockholders, depositors and patrons, representing all nationalities, religious beliefs and characters of business, constitute a contented, harmonious and prosperous business family, bespeaking the advancement, progress, enterprise, thrift and frugality of one of the busiest communities of the Great Queen City of the West—Brighton, a veritable bee-hive of industry. A fitting climax of the early success and progress of this institution is the purchase of the ground upon which the old Brighton House stood until it was demolished in 1873, upon which will be erected a modern banking and office building.

Two generations of Muths in the bee and honey enterprise have made Brighton famous, Fred W., now at the head of the Fred W. Muth Company, following in the footsteps of his father, Charles W. Muth, the famous apiculturist, whose knowledge and peculiar abilities he inherited. He knows the business in its every detail, from beginning to end. With an ordinary common school education young Muth began life in a wholesale grocery. Later he was connected with Mr. Weber, who had purchased the old Muth stand, and who, with his assistance, perpetuated the business to which he succeeded. Mr. Muth recently organized a stock company, of which he is President and manager, which is now conducting an extensive honey, beeswax and bee supplies business at the corner of Second and Walnut Streets. The success of the enterprise is assured because the name of Muth and honey are inseparable and because of Mr. Muth's ability to successfully meet all sorts and conditions of competition.

It has frequently been commented that if necessary Brighton could be more self-dependent than any other distinct portion of Cincinnati. She has the facilities for supplying the every want and need of life. Her retail stores are the best. The people are not clannish, however, but there appears to have been adopted by a sort of general consent a motto of "Brighton first, last and all the time." Mrs. A. Gaide conducts a millinery and dry goods store on the site of the old Brighton House, Miss Kate Furtwangler is one of the fashionable milliners, S. Hutner does an extensive business in ladies and gents furnishings and shoes, P. Fleck's ladies furnishing and People's Bargain Store are reliable retail establishments; R. W. Jahn is a leader in men's furnishings and hats; H. Ketterling, in dry goods and ladies' outfits; and Henry A. Dick, in furnishing goods, gloves, clothing, etc. With all these strictly up-to-date stores, it is seen that Brightonians may be well clothed right at home.

Foremost among the present day grocers are Joseph Dumont, Mrs. M. Saeger and F. William Wuest, and George Stegner and J. Mack in the retail meat business. M. Weisbrodt & Son and Isidor Klein & Co. are the leading wine merchants, while high-class saloons are conducted by Conrad Meister, Gus Boeh, Frank J. Lang, John S. Snyder, Philip Metz, Jr., A. Heilmann. H. J. Werbel, Chris. Horstmann, John H. Wolf, Herman L. Wittenburg and M. W. Thomas.

Brighton plumbers are F. W. Trinkle, William J. Fox, Albert Niesen and the Oliver Schlemmer Company, and August Huelsman conducts a big house furnishing store. G. Boehm has three wall paper and picture frame stores in Brighton and the Herbert Furniture Company has recently opened a store here. Charles J. Hardig is the manufacturer of "Bull Dog" paints, while R. A. Becker & Co. manufacture varnishes and Japans. A. Schemel, who succeeded Geo. Schanz, and Louis G. Klotter, at the Brighton Corner, are the jewelers.

DR. THEO. BANGE.

Among the physicians of Brighton are some of the foremost men of the medical profession in Cincinnati. Dr. C. C. Agin is one of the most prominent, having been a successful practitioner here for a number of years. Former County Coroner Theo. Bange has been conspicuously identified with the Brighton district for nearly a quarter of a century, and other successful ones are Drs. Joseph and D. F. Kindel, S. H. Spencer, H. C. Wendel, George Eger, Jr. and M. L. Amick. Schweikert & Thayer represent the legal profession in Brighton. Attorneys Philip and Otto Renner are practically Brightonians.

Most of the drug stores of Brighton and Mohawk are old established and historic concerns. Their present owners are H. Fred Oehlschlaeger, Mrs. George Eger, J. Koenig, G. A. Fieber, A. J. Overbeck, Jr., and Dr. A. J. Hofling. Among the present day cigar manufacturers are Frank Wessels and Nic Mauderer. Just over the Mohawk line on Stark Street, John Stuck conducts an extensive awning, tent and paulin factory. Newhouse Bros, at Mohawk Place; B. Schaefers, son of the pioneer, and Louis Hutzal, on Harrison Avenue near the Brighton Corner, are the blacksmiths and horse shoers and P. Kammer, M. Sandhaas and Fred Wuest the carriage and wagon makers and repairers. The extensive lumber business of F. F. Noble & Co., on Western Avenue, is one of the conspicuous enterprises and the firms of Ramsey & Cone, Julius Fey and Yanney & Doar are in the hauling business. J. G. McGarvey & Son are contractors and brick masons, and Charles Arbogast is a harness manufacturer. A. Schmidt conducts an extensive stove, tinware and house furnishing establishment and William and John Felix are in the same business, the former on Western Avenue and the latter on Baymiller Street. Martin Fisher is the one architect in Brighton, and Buschle & Schone are the representative merchant tailors.

The confectionery, toy and school supply store of M. Megeber at 1179 Harrison Avenue, is a rendezvous for Brighton school children, who find their wants generally supplied there. The Yoder Bath House is a novelty in Brighton, being the only one ever located in this part of the city. The conveniences it affords have long been needed.

The Brighton hardware store was established in 1840 by Mr. Lender at 971 Central Avenue (old number,) who sold it to L. C. Oberheu in 1868 and on March 1, 1892 he was succeeded by George Hartke, who moved to the present location in 1897. Mr. Hartke has been in the hardware business nearly a quarter of a century, having grown into it from a mechanical craftship.

The spectacles, "Fall of Babylon," in 1886 and 1888; "Rome Under Nero," 1877; "Moses, or the Bondage in Egypt," 1889, and "Montezuma, or the Conquest of Mexico," 1890, under the Order of Cincinnati, were given in Brighton. John Rettig was their designer.

COL. MAX. MOSLER

JACOB HOFFMANN.
WEBB G. WELBORNE.

MAX MOSLER, President of the Brighton German Bank Company, came to Cincinnati from New York in 1850. He left school at an early age, but later attended night high school. He entered the army before he was twenty-one years of age, and early in the war he was made Second Lieutenant of the 108th Regiment, O. V. I. Soon after he was taken prisoner, and upon his release he was compelled to retire from the service on account of physical disabilities, not, however, until he had rendered service that was eminently satisfactory to his superiors and distinguishing to himself, entitling him to the conspicuous position he has since occupied in the G. A. R. and Loyal Legion. Mr. Mosler was the President of the first Board of Control in this County, and for many years was connected with the Mosler Safe and Lock Company. It was largely through his efforts that the dream of all Brighton manufacturing and commercial interests was realized in the establishment of the Brighton German Bank, of which he has been President since its organization and to the interests of which he now devotes his entire time.

JACOB HOFFMANN, son of Philipp and Magdalena Hoffmann, was born on Walnut near Mercer, Sept. 12, 1857, being the eldest and only surviving of six children. He came to Brighton with his parents on January 25, 1859, and has lived in the locality continuously. He was a pupil in the Fourteenth District School and the B grade of the Fourth Intermediate, completing his education in Gundry's commercial college. In 1875 Mr. Hoffmann entered the employ of Devou & Co., wholesale milliners as assistant entry clerk, later becoming bookkeeper, which position he occupied until the firm discontinued business on December 31, 1880. On January 5 following he became the cashier and bookkeeper for the wholesale clothing firm Moch, Berman & Co., which position he now occupies. Mr. Hoffmann was married July 8, 1885, to Miss Eva M. Paul, and on January 1, 1893, he suffered the loss of his wife, their children, Louise, Magdalena, Charles and Clara, at that time ranging in age from six years to ten weeks, being left to his care, in which he has had the loving assistance of his parents, who have been blessed with health unto a rich old age.

JAMES D. SMITH was born in Cincinnati in 1858. In 1880 he started in the business of manufacturing foundry facings and supplies on Kindel Avenue, continuing there for twenty-one years. In 1901 he removed his factory to Cleveland. During his long residence here there was no more loyal and public-spirited Brightonian than "Jim" Smith. For two years he devoted considerable time and energy to the publication of the "Brighton Star", designed solely to advance the interests of the community, in which appeared an "Original Short History of Brighton", of which he was the author, data taken from which assisted in the compilation of this book. Mr. Smith for five years represented the Twelfth Ward in the Board of Education and was a member of the Union Board of High Schools.

WEBB G. WELBORNE has for a number of years been connected with the Commercial Tribune, of which he is now the Financial and Market Editor. Mr. Welborne is a native of Hoosierdom. He was born in Knightstown, Ind., where he attended the public schools. While yet a youth he learned the "art preservative of arts" and for a number of years worked at the case. He forsook his trade to become a newspaper correspondent. Mr. Welborne is a Trades Union man and for several years was the editor of the Labor Department of the Commercial Tribune.

LOUIS W. SAUER died during the progress of the work of compiling this book. He was a scholar, a public-spirited citizen and a loyal Brightonian. The community, the city and the world of learning suffered a loss in his death, and many individuals gave up a warm-hearted, genial, earnest and sympathetic friend. He was born at the corner of Fifth and John Streets in 1862, was married to Miss Carrie Muth in 1884, and died, after a successful and commendable, though only too short, life, on October 30, 1901. Mr. Sauer came to Brighton in 1880, soon after which he was placed in charge of the course on Pharmacology in the Cincinnati College of Medicine and Surgery. In 1896 he accepted the Chair of Materia Medica and Toxicology in the Cincinnati College of Pharmacy, and up to the time of his death he was identified with both of these institutions of learning.
